Mr. ALDRICH. No; and it would not be necessary if this bill passes.

Mr. CARTER. It would be necessary, I understand, for the individual desiring to avail himself of this privilege to make an application to the Treasury Department, and when that application shall have been granted it will be granted subject to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Treasury Department.

Now, answering briefly the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island that the great distillers would avail themselves of this particular product by establishing hundred-gallon stills here and there over the country without limitation, it is quite sufficient to say that the expense of maintaining these small individual establishments by the large concerns would be prohibitive.

Mr. HEYBURN. On the wages basis.

Mr. CARTER. On the mere wage basis alone, the wages of one man looking after the product of a still—as somebody would have to be looking after it—producing only a hundred gallons a day——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, does the Senator from Montana know how much the tax would be——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator from Rhode Island will just allow me to get in my peroration.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to test the information of the Senator from Montana. Does the Senator know how much the tax would be on 100 gallons of alcohol a day?

Mr. CARTER. I suppose something like $100.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I decline to yield further.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would be $207 a day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon declines to yield further.

Mr. FULTON. I understand there are going to be other days and other times and other nights, too, possibly, when Senators can discuss this proposition. I have only a few words further to add, and I do not care to stand on the floor all afternoon to add them.

I wish to make the suggestion, however, in response to the observation of the Senator from Rhode Island, that if this law shall be passed these great distilleries will start up innumerable little distilleries——

Mr. ALDRICH. They could.

Mr. FULTON. The fact that they could is one thing, but the fact that they would is entirely another proposition. I understood the Senator to say they were here lobbying for this measure, because they could do that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. FULTON. Which would imply that they would do it. Now, the history of the distillery business, so far as I have observed in the past years, is that the tendency has been rather to consolidate, to stop the small distilleries and run the large ones, and the argument always has been that that is done because they can operate them so much more cheaply. Yet is it possible that they would take advantage of a law which restricted them to under 100 gallons a day to start up distilleries all over the country simply because they would be taken out from under the operation of some of the restrictions and some of the regulations that pertain to the great distilleries?

If the farmers could build up great distilleries and conduct their business every day in the year, could have their plant running all the time, there would be no reason for removing these restrictions; but for the simple reason that they can not is why we wish to place them at the best possible advantage and under just as few restrictions as possible.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There seems to be some misinformation here in regard to this matter. In the first place, we are attempting for the first time to apply the use of cisterns and tanks to distilleries in this country, the cisterns or tanks to be locked and sealed and under the care of a Government inspector or a revenue agent. That is one point. The other is that where the restriction is as to 100 gallons of alcohol that means proof gallons. Fifty gallons of pure alcohol make 100 proof gallons. So these distilleries are limited to 100 proof gallons, and upon that the revenue tax would be only $103.50 instead of $207, as stated by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. What does the Senator understand the tax to be on proof spirits?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. One dollar and three cents.

Mr. ALDRICH. Where does the Senator get that information?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is $2.07 on alcohol.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is $1.10 on a proof gallon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. But the Senator said a while ago it would be $2.07.

Mr. ALDRICH. On alcohol.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator did not distinguish between alcohol and proof spirits.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that my friend read the law first before he undertakes to state what the tax is.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not care whether it is $1 or $1.10——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have read the law. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island the Senator made a mistake, and I undertook to correct him.

Mr. ALDRICH. I said the tax on alcohol was $2.07 and $1.10 on spirits of 100 proof, and was correct in both instances.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. FULTON. No; because it is perfectly immaterial to this discussion what the tax is.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to offer a very important resolution that will only take a minute? An old soldier has died since this discussion has commenced, and we want to withdraw the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must hold that the resolution is out of order under the rule. The Chair will recognize the Senator from West Virginia to introduce his resolution as soon as the Senator from Oregon concludes.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from Montana a moment ago, it is not necessary that there shall be one agent designated to every distillery. One can be designated by the Government to look after an entire section of the country. It is not necessary that he shall be physically present there all the time, and yet that is exactly what would be required were this amendment to be adopted under section 3284, which is the one that is proposed to subject this bill to.

SEC. 3284. Every distiller or person employed in any distillery who, in the absence of the storekeeper, or person designated to act as storekeeper, uses, or causes or permits to be used, any material for the purpose of making mash, wort, or beer, or for the production of spirits, or removes any spirits, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of taxes on the spirits so produced, distilled, or removed, and in addition thereto be liable to a penalty of $1,000.

He could not do a single thing; he could not prosecute the industry in any manner, shape, or form, unless the agent of the Government were present in the distillery.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the Senator from Oregon, he thinks there should be a Government officer present occasionally?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. To inspect the premises and see whether these people are violating the law?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Upon whom would the hardship rest if that officer is present all the time when the distillery is working, and at no other time?

Mr. FULTON. The hardship would rest on the farmer.

Mr. ALDRICH. Upon whom?

Mr. FULTON. On the farm distillery, as I call it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why?

Mr. FULTON. For the simple reason, as I have said before, that, in the first place, such distilleries will not be in operation all the time; they will have to depend upon the Government sending a man there when they are in operation; and the fact that they are not in operation all the time will be used as an argument for not furnishing a man at all. They can only run under the regulations that shall be imposed by the Treasury Department. I think everybody can readily see what the result would be if a little community saw fit to set up their own distillery to run a few weeks in this season and a few weeks in another season—the fact that they were not running continuously would be used as an argument by the Department for not sending an agent or a storekeeper there at all. I want this so that there will be no question about the benefits of this law extending to every community that sees fit to avail itself of it, and there is no reason why we should not do that.

Mr. LODGE. I want merely to ask a question for information, for I admit that this is all new to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Why does the Senator assume that the Government officers would not obey the law? I take it the Senator has no objection to having an officer present if an officer is furnished.

Mr. FULTON. I have no objection to having an officer present, but I am confident that an officer would not be present under those circumstances.

Mr. LODGE. That is just what I want to find out. What reason has the Senator to suppose that the Government will not carry out the law?

Mr. FULTON. Because it does not carry out the law now.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator assumes that.

Mr. FULTON. I have not said the Government will not carry out the law. But we are placing this in the discretion of the Department.

Mr. LODGE. I do not so understand.

Mr. FULTON. Yes. The Department makes the regulations under which they are to run, except as to this section, and you insist that this section shall be complied with; otherwise the conduct of these distilleries would be largely in the discretion of the Department.

Mr. LODGE. But this section is not in the discretion of the Department.

Mr. FULTON. No; and therefore——

Mr. LODGE. Then why are we bound to assume that the Government will not carry it out?

Mr. FULTON. Because whether or not a distillery shall be permitted to be set up is, under this bill, in my judgment, in the discretion of the Department.

Mr. LODGE. That has nothing to do with this section.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; it has something to do with it; and the fact that we have imposed the restrictions of this section on them will be used as an argument why a distillery will not be permitted in a particular locality. The argument will be that the product is too small to justify the Government in keeping an agent there.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. In part answer to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] I want to ask the Senator from Oregon what would be the necessity of the law, if the Government were to keep a man present all the time wherever there was a still? Then, if that were true, why should we have a law imposing a penalty for manufacturing when he was not there? The very fact that we insert that in the law assumes that there will be times when he will not be present, and those times would naturally be when the still would not be in operation.

Mr. ALDRICH. The officer would not be required to be present, of course, when the still was not in operation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, if he wanted to operate it upon ten minutes' notice he would have to find this agent somewhere.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue stated to the committee, and said very positively, that he would consent to no regulation which permitted the starting up of a still without notice to the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Oregon——

Mr. FULTON. The starting up is one thing——

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; but it goes on in a continuous process after starting.

Mr. FULTON. Do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to contend that it is necessary to protect the interests of the Government that an officer shall be there present all the time during the operation of the still?

Mr. ALDRICH. The experience of this Government for fifty years——

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me to answer?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; I will be glad to, as the Senator from West Virginia has been Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and he understands this question.

Mr. SCOTT. I will answer the Senator from Oregon. I was Commissioner of Internal Revenue for a brief time, and I will say that it is necessary to have a United States officer present when a still is being operated. That is necessary to protect the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator why, then, has the law not been applied to the peach-brandy industry?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a different thing entirely.

Mr. SCOTT. There has to be a storekeeper present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. There are in North Carolina about 200 brandy distilleries, in my county and the adjoining counties, and there is no officer present there all the time. The officers come around there and take measurements of the mash tubs. They measure the brandy, and they come around once a month and gauge it, and the Government gets its revenue.

Mr. FULTON. Can the Senator see that there would be any possible difference in using potatoes instead of peaches?

Mr. OVERMAN. No. It is no protection to the Government, as I understand it, to have this continuous supervision. The Government has this law; but it is not for the brandy distilleries.

Mr. ALDRICH. How many distilleries are there in North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think there are 200 brandy distilleries there now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I mean grain distilleries.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator can inform me, perhaps. He is on the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. How many are there that are not licensed now?

Mr. OVERMAN. Those that run the blockade?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no idea. There may be a great many there; but I am not talking about blockade distilleries. I am talking about brandy distilleries, with which the Senator is very familiar. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. If we remove the governmental supervision of distilleries, I imagine it will be quite as much to the benefit of the people of North Carolina as it will be to the benefit of any State in the Union, judging from past experience.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would the Senator propose to have a storekeeper at every brandy distillery?

Mr. ALDRICH. I would; yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would you not have done it before, if there had been any blockading in the brandy distilleries? There has been no blockading in the brandy distilleries. It has been only as to the corn distilleries.

Mr. ALDRICH. I intended to answer that later, but I will answer now. The quantity of fruit that can be made into brandy in this country is limited. The amount of illicit distilling through that process must be necessarily limited. But when you talk about producing alcohol not only from grain, but from every other known substance, there is, and there can be, no limit to the product. I would put a greater amount of surveillance around the production of fruit brandy, if I had my way. I think the thing is now too loose. I do not want to see this whole country transformed as some parts of North Carolina have been in the past—I will not say anything about the present—into distilleries that are producing illicit alcohol and illicit whisky upon which no tax is paid.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is on account of the storekeepers who have been appointed and sent out there, who are in cahoots with the distillers.

Mr. ALDRICH. It may be in some cases that that is true. I imagine that it is almost impossible to get revenue officers who will enforce the law in all cases with the greatest amount of rigor. They ought to be sent there, perhaps, from some other State, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggests, because it has been extremely difficult—and I am not saying anything against North Carolina—the Senator himself knows it has been extremely difficult in all the years of the past to enforce the revenue laws as to the production of distilled spirits in some portions of that State.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think that the Government could put a storekeeper there without his entering at some time into combination with the distiller, through which the Government would be defrauded? Can you stop that sort of thing anywhere?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is no reason, in my judgment, why these restrictions should all be removed and that no storekeeper should be employed in any distillery anywhere. We ought to try to stop fraud, and it is the duty of this Congress to try to enforce the law justly and properly.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is more blockading in grain distilleries than there is in brandy distilleries, where there is no storekeeper.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FULTON. I should like to proceed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to state here that there is more blockading in a grain distillery, where a storekeeper is present all the time, than there is in a brandy distillery, where the brandy gauger only goes around once a month. The Senator will agree that that is the fact.

Mr. FULTON. If they can conduct brandy distilleries without the maintenance of a storekeeper or a Government agent there all the time, they can conduct the distillery contemplated in this bill under the same sort of plan. I understand that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has said that he can, without this amendment, make the necessary regulations to protect the Government, and I believe he should be permitted to do so.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator does not want to misquote the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I am sure. The Commissioner says that this is an experiment and that nobody can tell what the effect of it is going to be; but he is willing to try the experiment if Congress desires him to do so.

Mr. FULTON. Very well; let us give the farmers of this country the benefit of the doubt, if there is a doubt. Let us give them the benefit of the doubt for a while at least, and let us try the experiment. If we find that the Government is being wronged, that the Government is losing its revenues through the law, then we will amend the law. We have had a law so restricted that nothing could be accomplished under it. Let us, if necessary, lean a little over the other way and see if something can be accomplished.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me to ask him a question, does he think that the storekeepers ought to be removed from all the distilleries, or only from farmers' distilleries?

Mr. FULTON. I say that a storekeeper should only be removed from that class of distilleries contemplated in the section we are discussing, to which the amendment is offered. The Senator knows very well that it has no contemplation of these large distilleries.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are about 450 grain distilleries now in existence in this country of precisely the same class.

Mr. FULTON. Under 100 gallons per day capacity?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of the capacity of under 100 gallons a day. Does the Senator think that the storekeepers ought to be removed from those distilleries?

Mr. FULTON. If they are going into this business, yes; if not, no; and I will state the reason for that. It is because I believe that this business of producing denaturized alcohol is one of wide public interest and concern. I think if it shall develop into anything like the proportions that we hope and expect, it will be of very great benefit. I do not think that the production of alcohol for other purposes, particularly as a beverage, is of any benefit. I think that every possible restriction should be thrown around that, but this is for a beneficial purpose, and I think that the production of it should be made just as cheap as possible and every possible restriction removed from it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The 400 or more grain distilleries which are now in existence of a capacity of 100 gallons per day would, under this bill, go on and produce this product without any denaturing at all, and send it, under the provisions of this bill, in tank cars or otherwise, to a denaturing plant, which may be a thousand miles away. There is no restriction whatever on the transportation of spirits from the distilleries where they are originally produced. The farmer who produces under this proposed law may send his product to Peoria or to New York or to San Francisco before it is denatured at all.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator think that that can be done?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. In a second. Does not the Senator from Rhode Island think that that can be very well provided against by regulations so as to require proper bonds to be given?

Mr. ALDRICH. But the law provides that they may transport, and the Commissioner can not refuse.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask if it is not transported in sealed casks?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. It has not been suggested, but it is apparent on the face of this bill, that primarily its purpose is to repeal every provision of the internal-revenue law except one, and every section of the internal-revenue law of the United States is repealed by this bill except one, which is contained in the Senate amendment. That is true, is it not?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

Mr. HEYBURN. The chairman of the Finance Committee says that that is correct. That being the case, why is it necessary to consider the provisions of the existing law, when by the provisions of this bill they are all repealed, except the one requiring the presence of a revenue officer?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I do not understand that this bill repeals any of the provisions of existing law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Every section of the revenue law except this one is repealed by this bill, and the rules and regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue are substituted for the existing law. That is the provision.

Mr. FULTON. As to this class of distilleries?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. I am referring only to this class of distilleries.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted to complete the question, and then the Senator from Kansas can take up the question with the Senator from Oregon, if it is mutually desirable. I want to know whether or not I was correct in my interpretation of the effect and purpose of this law.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is precisely correct.

Mr. HEYBURN. Because much of the discussion has centered around the consideration of the existing provisions of the existing law when, as a matter of fact, they have nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. FULTON. I yielded for a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon declines to yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I will not go beyond a question, if the Senator will be patient with me for a second.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator does not indicate how much longer his question is to be.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will indicate that it is terminated.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FULTON. In another second I will yield the floor.

It is not a fact, Mr. President, that every section of the law, excepting this section, 3284, is repealed. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is permitted to make regulations. Some of those regulations may, and indeed it is contemplated that they may, conflict with existing law; but, so far as those regulations are concerned, these particular establishments are exempted from existing law, and the existing law stands unless the establishments are exempted from it by reason of the regulations.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question, because I should like to hear the answer of the Senator from Oregon. Can the Senator from Rhode Island give us any idea as to the number of these small distilleries to be established if the amendment that he suggests is omitted from the bill? Can he form any idea as to the number?

Mr. ALDRICH. Nobody can tell.

Mr. MALLORY. Would it be a thousand or 10,000?

Mr. ALDRICH. It may be 50,000.

Mr. SPOONER. Nobody can tell.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Maine has stated that they have 6,000 distilleries of this kind in Germany, and Germany is, in proportion of area, I think, about one one-hundredth part the size of the United States, though I am not sure about the figures.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the Senator from Rhode Island contemplate providing an inspector for each one of those distilleries?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly. If the people are going into the manufacture of alcohol, it is the duty of the Government of the United States, from my standpoint, to see that they do it honestly, especially as they are going into the proposition under a law charging only a 10-cent tax.

Mr. MALLORY. If that is the case, it undoubtedly would kill this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Otherwise the distilleries would run all the time.

Mr. MALLORY. If you are going to appoint 10,000 additional inspectors, that will kill this bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Ten thousand additional distilleries will not be put into operation under the provisions of this bill this year, I take it, or for some time to come.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator suggested that there might be 100,000 of these distilleries spring up. In that event, as suggested by the Senator from Florida, you would have to have 100,000 of these inspectors, because one at least would have to be in every establishment; but the Senator knows, and everybody knows reasonably well, that if we impose this restriction requiring the presence of a storekeeper in each one of these establishments, then there will not be a hundred thousand nor will there be a thousand, but there will be practically none, because that will be the effect of it.

Without taking up further time of the Senate, I will simply say that I do hope that if we commit any error here it will be one on the side of the farmer and the producer of this country, giving him an opportunity to engage in this enterprise; and then, if we shall discover later on that we have not thrown around the business the proper restrictions, we can easily remedy that evil. Let us get the industry once started, and then, if we find that it requires further regulation, we can regulate it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, first, as to the point suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], there can be no question but what his interpretation of the section is absolutely correct. I will read it:

> Such distilleries may by such regulations be exempted from such provisions of the existing laws relating to distilleries as may be deemed expedient by said officials.

Language can not be plainer than that. We put into the hands of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a right to repeal every provision of the statutes of the United States bearing upon or regulating this particular class of distilleries.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. LONG. I will ask whether under this bill without this amendment the Commissioner of Internal Revenue could not impose the restrictions of section 3284 of the Revised Statutes if in his judgment it was necessary in order to protect the revenue?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think he could. I have no doubt about that; but he also could refuse to do it.

Mr. LONG. If we do not restrict the Commissioner in suspending the other sections of the statutes, why should we prohibit him from suspending this particular section?

Mr. ALDRICH. Because, in the opinion of the committee, with the exception, I think, of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], it was important, in the interests of the revenue, that this safeguard at least should be retained if all the other restrictions surrounding the production were to be removed.

The Senators who have spoken upon this question from the farmer's standpoint have, it seems to me, entirely misapprehended the purpose of this amendment and its probable effect. American legislators are, like other people, I suppose, easily forgetful of the past. We fail to remember in one generation the experience of another. It is so in this case.

Forty years ago, with a tax of $2 per gallon on distilled spirits, they were sold in the principal markets of the country at 75 cents or less per proof gallon, and it was clearly impossible for any distiller to produce any alcoholic spirits and pay the tax and sell it in competition with the illicit product.

This condition, which became intolerable in 1867 and the years following, led to an investigation by legislative committees of both Houses of Congress and the enactment substantially of the law which is now in existence controlling the production of distilled spirits. Of that committee the leading spirit was the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is now fortunately a member of this body. That committee had the assistance of the then district attorney in New York, Mr. Benjamin F. Tracey. They prepared this legislation, which I believe is fairly considered a model in every country of the world. It was then found absolutely necessary, for the protection of the revenues and for the protection of distillers who honestly paid their taxes, that the very rigorous provisions of existing law should be enacted. These provisions are very elaborate and very drastic. They have answered their purpose without question and have very largely prevented the dishonest production of distilled spirits. The provisions of this bill, as has been said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], propose to revolutionize the legislation I have referred to and to put in the hands of one man the power to remove every restriction which experience has shown to be necessary to prevent fraud. What are those restrictions? In what do they consist? One of the most effective, if not the most effective, provision of the law is that at every stage of the manufacture there should be a Government officer present in every registered distillery to watch and report upon every stage of the process, the amount of grain or other material used, and the amount of distilled spirits produced. The process of distillation from beginning to end is subject to Government inspection through a storekeeper and gauger, and a record is kept for inspection.

Such safeguards have been thrown around every process of the manufacture as experience has shown to be necessary for the protection of this important source of revenue.

Do Senators realize that it only costs the distiller 10 or 12 cents a proof gallon to produce an article upon which the Government imposes a tax of $1.10 per gallon? You can readily imagine the incentive which the difference gives to the illicit production of distilled spirits.

What is the demand for this legislation and what is proposed to be effected by it? There is a universal demand that some measure should be devised by which alcohol, free from tax, could be safely used in the arts, industries, and for the production of heat, light, and power. It is extremely important that this demand should be met, but it should be met, as it can be, without endangering the revenue.

It is extremely important for our arts and industries and for all domestic purposes that alcohol, which is now a universal solvent, should be manufactured as cheaply as possible. Last year Congress enacted a law to permit the use of alcohol, denatured or otherwise rendered unfit for use for drinking purposes, free of tax in the arts and industries. That law, we are told by the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Montana, was not effective to secure the result which they intended it should have. Why? They say provisions were put into the law that registered distillers must submit to certain conditions and restrictions. I imagine that it is not intended by this act to provide that distilleries can be run without being registered. There have been, of course, a considerable number of distilleries in the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee and Georgia and Kentucky all these years without being registered, but I assume that there is no disposition to make this class of distilleries lawful.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ALDRICH. For a question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Did not the Department construe the law to mean that no one could make application to manufacture under it except a registered distiller—one who is already in the distilling business?

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not registered for this particular purpose, but a registered distillery could make the application. I understand that was the ruling.

Mr. ALDRICH. It might have been—probably was—the ruling that no one but a registered distiller could make application. That goes without saying; but there is nothing in the law or in the practice of the Department which prevents any person from making an application and being registered as a distiller at any time.

The registration was of course the foundation of the whole transaction. But the Senator from North Dakota or anybody else in the United States can any day make an application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for a license to run a distillery, and the application is granted as a matter of course, provided there is sufficient bond given and the law is complied with in other ways. There is no trouble at all about that.

But we have now a proposition in this bill which is entirely new in our revenue legislation. It has no precedent in our own or in the legislation of any other country similarly situated. With equally powerful motives for fraud and with a vast area of territory to be watched there is no precedent in the laws of any country.

Now, what do the committee propose and what is the character of opposition to the suggested amendment? We propose by this amendment to allow small distilleries to be established anywhere in the country under regulations which will remove all the numerous restrictions which are placed around distilling by existing law except one, and that we believe is necessary to protect the revenue.

We receive about $140,000,000 a year from the tax upon distilled spirits, and this revenue is only possible if the law is honestly and rigidly enforced. No honest distiller can otherwise run his distillery for twenty-four hours. For this protection of the revenue what do we suggest? That when these distilleries are running, producing an article which should cost them, it is said by the many advocates of this legislation, not more than 10 to 12 cents a gallon to produce, and upon which the Government now requires a tax of $2.07 a gallon, an officer of the Government shall be present. We propose to allow anyone to establish these small distilleries without restriction, but we simply insist——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator will excuse me for a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. We simply insist, in the interest of the Government of the United States, which has this $140,000,000 at stake, that there shall be present—and that is the only insistence we make—whenever the distillery is running, is producing alcohol, a storekeeper, paid by the Government of the United States, and imposing no burden of any kind whatever upon the man who owns the distillery. We propose that in the interest of the honest administration of the law, and no man can object to it—and I say that deliberately—unless he has some other purpose in view than the honest administration of the revenue laws of the United States. I am not talking about Senators, but I am talking about the people who are behind them and who are demanding that this legislation shall be of such a character that no restrictions whatever shall be placed upon the production of alcohol free of tax except the honest purpose of the producer. Is this safe? Let us see.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator whether this bill as it passed the House had such restrictions as would at all guard the Treasury? Does the Senator contend that where the manufactured product is to be taken into steel tanks which are locked and which can not be unlocked except in the presence of the storekeeper that that is not giving sufficient protection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am glad the Senator asked me that question, because it is one of the most important points in this legislation. What is the suggestion made here? It is a suggestion of putting the materials into a still, and that when the process of distillation is completed the finished product shall be run into a steel tank, which shall be locked and the key to which shall be in the hands of a Government officer. Now, let us see what are the opportunities for fraud. The article itself, the alcohol, is produced in a still; it is run perhaps 10 feet, perhaps a hundred feet, perhaps a thousand feet through pipes into a steel tank. The opportunities for fraud between the still and the tanks are unlimited. Take a still located—I will not say in North Dakota—but in some remote town or in some remote district, hundreds of miles perhaps away from a Government officer, with no restrictions whatever, producing alcohol upon which if the manufacturer avoids paying a tax he is making a profit of $2.07 a gallon. It can be taken out through the pipes as easily as I can take a paper from this desk. It would not go into the tank at all. There would be no sort of protection to the Government in that kind of a distillery.

Now, I repeat—and that is the reason why the committee offered this amendment—this is an experiment. I do not know whether there will be a hundred or a thousand or five hundred or five thousand small distilleries. Nobody can tell. It is an experiment; but while the experiment is being made, gentlemen, I appeal to you, that at the expense of the Government of the United States, in the interest of its revenue, in the interest of the distillers who are required by law to pay this high tax, you should put around it all the safeguards you can without stopping in any way the production of denatured alcohol by the farmers or by anybody else for wise and proper purposes and free of tax.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. A few minutes ago the Senator from Rhode Island corrected me in a statement I made as to the contention of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I have his official report, and this is what he says:

> Section 4 of the proposed substitute bill refers more directly to what is commonly termed the "farm distillery," or a distillery operated for the production alone of alcohol for denaturing. The provisions of this section are, to a certain extent, a reversal of the general internal-revenue laws with regard to the production of distilled spirits, but it is believed and hoped that at these small plants there may be some relaxation of the close and continued surveillance of distillery operations necessary at larger plants, and where alcohol is produced both for commercial and denaturing purposes.
> At any rate, to meet the demand it is not deemed unwise by this office to make the test, and to allow alcohol to be produced for denaturing purposes alone at these small plants without the constant presence of a Government official.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand. That is substantially what I stated in the Senate, I think. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue said before the Committee on Finance that this was an experiment, that he could not tell, in the first place, how many——

Mr. FULTON. What I wished to accentuate was the fact that he recommends——

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. FULTON. He recommends a system of permitting these distilleries to run without the presence of a Government agent.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the presence of the Government agent all of the time is a very different thing from the presence of a Government agent only at the time when the distillery is in operation. Section 3284 of the Revised Statutes only refers to the times when the operation is actually going on. There is no storekeeper as there is in other cases——

Mr. FULTON. Now, really, is there much more danger of fraud being perpetrated when the distillery is in operation than when it is still and the alcohol is in the warehouse or in the cistern or wherever it may be kept? Is there not just as much chance for fraud when the distillery is not in operation as when it is in operation? And if it is necessary to have the agent present when the distillery is in operation, is it not equally necessary to have him there all the time while there is any alcohol on the premises?

Mr. ALDRICH. The alcohol is not in tanks when the distillery is not in operation.

Mr. FULTON. Where is it; in the cistern?

Mr. ALDRICH. No. When the still is not in operation the tank is not used, and it has no product in it. There is no grain or cabbage or whatever you please in the establishment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise for information. I wish to inquire what opportunities there are for fraud in this matter? I understand there is to be a continuous process in steel tanks, the key to be in the possession of a Government officer.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. What opportunity is there to get the alcohol out unless they break open the tank?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think one of the Senator's moonshining constituents would find great difficulty as long as there is a pipe running from the distillery to the tank, which is not——

Mr. OVERMAN. It is all under lock and key.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the pipe is not under lock and key. I venture to say that without governmental supervision, supposing the capacity of the still to be a hundred gallons a day, one could easily enough, in a hundred different ways, abstract fifty gallons a day and not pay any tax upon it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the pipe run into the cistern?

Mr. ALDRICH. The alcohol runs through the pipes. I do not think it is necessary, especially to a North Carolinian, to explain——

Mr. OVERMAN. Is there not a key to the cistern room, which is held by the officer?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no provision in this bill about a cistern room; only the tank.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, whatever you call it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The tank.

Mr. OVERMAN. The tank.

Mr. ALDRICH. The tank is locked up. If the main door of the Capitol should be kept locked all the time, with a hundred doors around the different sides of the building open, I would not consider that very much of a safeguard to prevent a man from leaving the Capitol.

Mr. OVERMAN. But everything is under lock and key.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; nothing is locked up except the steel tank. They have taken the great precaution to require a steel tank and to have it locked up and to have the key in the hands of some Government officer; but at every step of the process until the distilled spirits gets into the tank there is every opportunity in the world to steal. The people who steal will not be the constituents of the Senator from Montana, I assume; but there will be a lot of people, perhaps in some wicked State like North Carolina, where they are accustomed to this thing, who will manufacture alcohol ostensibly for denaturization, but really for sale or for drinking purposes in their own community. It is that class of fraud we are trying to guard against in this experiment, as I know it is.

I hope from the bottom of my heart the experiment will succeed, and succeed to the extent that the Senator from Montana hopes it will succeed, and that it will reduce the cost of alcohol to be used for heat, light, and power, and for industrial and mechanical purposes; but do not let us start out with an advertisement that we propose to remove the restrictions which the experience of a half a century has shown to be absolutely necessary for the protection of the revenue. Let us try this experiment now in this way. If we find next year that the appropriation for storekeepers is so large, or if experience shows that this industry can be carried on successfully without restraint, then it will be time enough to make a change.

We are not suggesting the imposition of the burden of a cent or any other kind of a burden upon the farmers of this country. We say we wish you godspeed in this work; but our experience with the collection of the revenue leads us to believe that if this experiment is made there should be an officer of the Government of the United States, without any expense to you, to supervise and look over this matter in the interest of honesty and of the revenue.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island to say there is no blockading in any other State except North Carolina?

Mr. ALDRICH. I would not say that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why does the Senator from Rhode Island mention North Carolina? He knows there is blockading, especially in the big centers, where there are big distilleries.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know much about it. I have no doubt the Senator from Rhode Island knows more about it than I do; but there is more blockading in the big centers than anywhere else, where the distilleries of the whisky trust are located.

Mr. SCOTT. We have had trouble in your State.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt of it, but the Senator from West Virginia knows there is blockading everywhere. You can not crush it out. It is in Virginia and West Virginia and in Rhode Island, I suspect, and especially in the large distillery centers in this country. Does the Senator claim there is no fraud in his State?

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not mean to mention the State of the Senator from North Carolina in any invidious way, but unfortunately it has a reputation throughout the country, which I presume is not deserved, that has existed for a half a century, of producing more illicit whisky than any other State in this country.

Mr. OVERMAN rose.

Mr. ALDRICH. I may be wrong.

Mr. OVERMAN. Where did the Senator get that information?

Mr. ALDRICH. From the reports of the revenue officers and the Commissioner. I will call my friend the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] as a witness.

Mr. OVERMAN. More than in any other State in the Union?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I doubt whether there is any such information.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will call upon the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. FULTON. I think that has grown out of a false deduction from a historic statement as to what the governor of one of those States said to the governor of the other.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into a discussion of this matter, because my friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I think, can make it entirely clear. But as Commissioner of Internal Revenue for a short time, I do know that with the stringent laws we now have on the books and with all the vigilance that can be exercised by the Treasury Department and its officials, it is almost impossible to protect the Government against fraud.

When this bill originally came to the Senate I hesitated about voting for it, notwithstanding the great advantages which it was claimed for it, for two reasons: One was that I believed it would lead to a great deal of fraud upon the Government by the distillers of this alcohol, and the other was that I believed that the farmer was not getting what he thought he was. In other words, in the language of the street, he was being "gold-bricked." There is no question in my mind if you do not throw about the distilling of this alcohol, for the purpose of denaturing it, every safeguard that it is possible for the wisdom of the Senate, with the advice of the Treasury Department, to devise, you are going to lose a very large amount of the revenues of this Government which are now collected on the distillation of alcohol and spirits.

I do not care to get into this discussion. I do not care to say what State does the most moonshining, but all of them do it more or less, and it appears to be the ambition all over the country to defraud the Government, if it can be done, in moonshine whiskies and alcohol.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from West Virginia to some extent that the farming public, in the bill which was passed, did get something of a gold brick. I admit also that at the present time it will get the real brick, but it will get it in the neck and nowhere else. That is the condition of the bill as it is to-day, and that will be the result.

Mr. President, we have read statements in the press for the last year claiming that this was a bill for the benefit of the farming public; that it would give the farmer a chance to produce and compete with the great whisky trust of the country. The farmer has commenced to believe there was something in that. I myself have never believed that he would receive anything like the benefit that has been claimed. I have hoped, however, that he could secure some little benefit in finding some remuneration for his labor at times when he could not use it properly on the farm itself. You are taking that right entirely away from him.

I want to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he believes that there is a single farmer in the United States who could run a still the year round, or six months in the year, or three months a year? I doubt if you could find a single one who could run it more than a month or two in a year. If he makes any profit out of it, he must make the profit out of the produce of his farm. He has to take some portion of the year in raising those products, and if he makes anything out of it, it will only be the waste products practically, because those things which have a ready sale in the market can not be used profitably for the purposes of making denatured alcohol.

There are certain seasons of the year when the farmer must give his attention to raising his little crop. He may have cornstalks that he can use, but he has to first raise them. He can not afford to use his barley. He can not afford to use wheat. In my country he can not afford to use corn, and I am not certain he can even afford to use potatoes.

Suppose he could use the latter. How long will it take him to use all of the waste products he will have? He could use it all within a month. When would he go to work on it? There would be wet days in September when he would not be doing anything else. There would be some days in the winter probably which he could utilize. He might want to make 10 gallons in one day, and nothing else. He might extend this over the whole year. He is either going to be cut out entirely from any benefit under this act, or he is going to be allowed to work his still whenever he finds it convenient to do so, and he can not find it convenient unless he can act upon a minute's or upon a day's notice, and yet he is supposed to send for a sixty or a hundred dollar or a hundred and twenty-five dollar man to hang around in a neighborhood where there is only one still, which may not be operated thirty days in a year.

Under this bill we could divide the country up into sections, and if the farmer is allowed to manufacture his product he can manufacture it when he can do so. He can manufacture 10 gallons to-day, another 15 gallons two weeks from to-day, and another quantity three days from that. When he gets his tank full he can send to the agent, and say, "It is filled, and I want it denatured." That is the only time there will be any necessity in the world to have a Government agent there. If we are to get any benefit whatever for the farming public they will have to get it in that way. I repeat what I said before. It is impossible for any farmer in the United States to run his still during the busy season of the year or with hired help, because his product would be too expensive for the benefit that he would get out of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think a man who has a still in a tenement house on the East Side of New York ought to have more, or less, supervision than a farmer?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think there is anybody in a tenement house in the city of New York who is going to run one of these stills for denatured alcohol. If he does, there is a punishment for it, just the same as there is a punishment in North Carolina, or any other State. He has to get a license, does he not? Is the man in a tenement house in New York going to pay for a license to run a business when he is liable to be arrested at any moment?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator could not have heard the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] in his defense of his own State, in which he said that a large part of the illicit distilling, or a considerable part of it anyhow, was carried on in certain parts of the large cities. Every Government officer knows that. Every man who is familiar with the collection of the revenue knows that. There has been quite as much——

Mr. McCUMBER. It may be carried on in the mountains; it may be carried on in the cities; but it is not carried on by those who take out a Government license.

Mr. ALDRICH. Should you have a different rule—that is what I am trying to ask the Senator—for one class of people who carry on distilling than you have for others?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not asking for any different rule. If a man does not manufacture more than 10 or 15 or 20 gallons a day, then you can have the same provisions apply to the man in the tenement house in New York that you have apply to the man on the farm. What I insist upon is that the man on the farm, if he is going to get any benefit from it, must get it at times when he finds it convenient to do his work, and his convenience would seldom, if ever, correspond with the convenience of some particular agent who happens to be in that section of the country at the time.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me to read a few lines from the bill providing for the establishment of these small distilleries?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. It reads:

> And the operation of such distilleries shall be upon the execution of such bonds and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

Certainly that would exclude them from the category of illicit distilleries referred to by the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. What I meant to say was that if you give the right to the small distilleries in every portion of the United States, without the restrictions and safeguards which experience has shown must be thrown around this manufacture, you will encourage in New York and in remote sections of the country a great amount of illicit distilling. It is absolutely important that the small distilleries should be watched with equal vigilance with the large ones to prevent illicit distilling. That frauds are committed does not necessarily mean that they are not licensed distilleries. I remember investigating the subject a few years ago, when the claim was made that a large part of the illicit whisky made in the United States was made in licensed distilleries with the connivance of Government officers. That has to be guarded against as much as the other.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator, are not the fruit distillers also registered and licensed? Very well. Is there any serious complaint that they are defrauding the country? They manufacture without the presence of a Government agent constantly over them. They take the fruit as it comes from their farms and use it when it is convenient for them, and when they have their tanks filled they make a report of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue within three days said before the Committee on Finance that he thought the present system of collecting revenue as to fruit distilleries was a very dangerous one, and that if he had his way he would provide for legislation which would throw additional safeguards around it. But there is one safeguard which is always present. The amount of fruit produced in the United States that can be used or is used for the production of brandy is extremely limited. In fact, fruit brandy, compared with all the production of distilled spirits, is infinitesimal.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is enough to supply four hundred and fifty-odd stills, is there not?

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly; but the amount——

Mr. McCUMBER. Those are more stills than there are stills for denatured alcohol at the present time.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator does not expect an answer to that question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Those are as many as there are stills of any other kind.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is just about the same number as the number of small-grain distilleries, perhaps. I think the numbers are very much the same. But there can be no great amount of harm and no great amount of fraud with these fruit distilleries. That is always understood. I would throw greater safeguards around them, but there is a limit upon the product which must always limit the amount of fraud which can possibly be committed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish simply to ask a question of one or the other of the Senators who hold the floor. This provision, as I understand it, only requires that when distillation is in progress there shall be a representative of the Government present to supervise it. There is no expense to the distiller on that account?

Mr. ALDRICH. None whatever.

Mr. FORAKER. I will state to the Senator from North Dakota what my trouble about that is.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will explain it, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator to say that it would not suit the convenience of the party who wanted to operate a still always to send for the Government representative. Is there any very great hardship about that? I do not know; I am asking for information.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will give all the information I have on the subject. Suppose there are 500 farmers in the United States who in the next year, under the influence of the press reports of the country that there is a great deal of profit in the manufacture of denatured alcohol, should put up little stills, each one of which will not cost, perhaps the whole thing, more than $150. Most of them already have their granary room and other rooms for the storage of their products, and there will be merely the cost of the tank and the cost of the still, etc. It will be a very small item. Now, we will suppose that they do not intend to run it more than one day or two days or three days—whenever they desire to manufacture. Will the Government keep a man there the year round?

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator addresses that inquiry to me, as he seems to be doing, I would say that it would not be necessary. I should think the Government might have a man who could go from place to place. If one of these stills is to be operated for the purpose only of making 10 gallons at a time, as the Senator suggests, the presence of a Government agent would be very brief.

Mr. McCUMBER. Right there is the trouble, Mr. President. It has been suggested that there would be one representative in a section of the country, but I will take a farmer in the State of Ohio. It is in the month of August or September, which is in the harvesting time, or in the time of taking up potatoes. There may be a week of rain, and the work on the farm will have to be suspended. The farmer might wish to commence this work the next morning after there had been an evening's rain and want to run just that day and stop. He has got to send off and find this inspector. He will probably get around there by the time the farmer wants to go back to work on the farm again, and the time he wants to give to the manufacture of denatured alcohol will be wasted, because he can not have the inspector there when he wants him.

Mr. SPOONER. Can he not give notice to the collector of internal revenue of the proper district when he may intend to begin?

Mr. CARTER. He may not know when it is going to rain. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCUMBER. If he should depend upon the Weather Bureau, it may be that he could; but he can not always depend upon it.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, this is largely experimental anyway; and if some of the members of the committee felt that if it should be carried on without restriction and should turn out to violate substantially the internal-revenue laws of the country, it would be an end of it. There was not a man in the committee who is not anxious to facilitate in every way compatible with the interest of the Government the manufacture and distillation of these spirits by the farmer of whatever material it may be done; but we were confronted with very grave opposition to permit it at all from distillers all over the United States, who thought it would be an impossible competition, which could only be predicated or was only predicated upon the assumption and the knowledge apparently on the part of the distillers that it would lead to constant and successful evasion of the revenue laws. The committee called the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before it, who is heartily in favor of the proposition to afford the farmers of the country every possible facility to utilize the potatoes, the poorer class of grain, or anything else which can be used in this way in a manner that will not ultimately defeat the whole project by an evasion of the revenue laws; and his view was that we could start in with these regulations, everybody being in favor of it, and try it for a year, and then when the Congress again met, if they were found to be too strict, it could be taken up upon its merits and readjusted.

That was the theory upon which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and myself, I may say, yielded to this proposition. We can not afford, and Senators will not ask that, to leave it in a way which will permit a violation of the revenue laws.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. SPOONER. I beg pardon of the Senator for saying what I have.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all right. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I only want to say that I have not yielded on the amendment and did not yield on the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. No; but the Senator thought the amendment which was adopted by a majority of the committee would be infinitely better than nothing.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I thought it would be better than no bill, because I was fearful that unless the amendment were put on the bill I could not get the bill out of the committee. In saying this I mean no reflection on the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. It is an experiment, as I said before, and it was thought, and I believe wisely thought, that we ought to proceed with it in a careful way.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there can be no possible law enacted that will not find itself broken here and there. There can be no criminal law enacted but that you will find some person who will commit the crime of breaking it. So long as we manufacture spirits of any kind and so long as there is a Government tax upon it there will be some few persons in the United States who will be guilty of an attempted fraud upon the Government. But I do not believe that the farming community as a community is of such a character that you can not trust them to a reasonable extent in the manufacture of denatured alcohol.

The Senator from Wisconsin states that there is danger of fraud being perpetrated unless we adopt this amendment. In my opinion, there is no more danger of a fraud as an experiment than there has been of fraud as an experiment in the manufacture of fruit brandy. It is an experiment to be sure, but I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that, in my candid opinion, it will not be an experiment, so far as the farmer is concerned, if this provision goes into the bill, for none of them will attempt to run stills under those restrictions. Under this legislation no one could afford to run a still for the manufacture of this product unless it were done upon a large scale, and the farmer could not afford to do it upon a large scale.

Even if we admit that it is an experiment, can we not trust the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to apply the proper remedy? Let us have the bill as it came from the House. If the Commissioner ascertains that the farmers are committing such an abominable fraud upon the Government that it is necessary to enact this proposed law into a rule, he can apply that rule. In my candid opinion, he will never find it necessary to apply a rule which will declare that if any man manufactures a gallon of this product without the presence of a Government official, he shall take his chances of a penitentiary term. I do not believe it will be necessary to go to that extent, but I am certain that we practically destroy the bill altogether, so far as the farming public is concerned, if we prohibit the farmers from manufacturing at any time they see fit.

Now, it is said you will have the agent there at all times and it does not cost the farmer anything. Mr. President, the stills probably, in the first instance, would not manufacture 300 gallons a year. How long will the farmers' stills stand the test of an expense for the payment of agents, which would be ten times the value of the product produced upon the farm?

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to ask the Senator, who has given this subject a great deal more study than I have had an opportunity to give it, what he thinks will be the effect of this legislation in the way of encouraging the distillation of a denatured alcohol by farmers and others on a small scale—that is to say, will it be a business generally gone into by the farmers all over the country? Is it his idea that every farmer is going to supply himself with a still and make his own denatured alcohol?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know, Mr. President. No one can tell how many will go into it. I am assuming that if it is for their benefit and if it is going to benefit the agriculturists, there will be a great many. If it will not prove profitable, there will, of course, be very few.

Mr. GALLINGER. The law of supply and demand will regulate that.

Mr. FORAKER. I have been getting a great many telegrams in the last day or two asking me to support this measure. I received a few minutes ago one signed by the principal distillers of Cincinnati asking me to oppose the measure, even in its amended form. I never had read the bill until I received the telegrams. I then sent out and got it and I have been reading it and trying to study it and to find out what the trouble is. I am derelict perhaps in not paying attention sooner to so important a measure, but I have been so occupied that probably I have a good excuse for not having done so.

But now that the bill has come up, I should like to understand the measure, and I am not asking any questions except only to get information. I asked one a moment ago as to what would be the effect upon the small distiller of having his operations supervised by a Government representative, for it seems to me there is a valid objection to creating two classes of distillers, both manufacturing alcohol, one under governmental supervision and the other without any supervision. If the small distiller is not to pay any of the added expense for being supervised, it does seem to me that it is a proper precaution to take against the opportunity for fraud, of which we know there has been a great deal in connection with small distillations.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FORAKER. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota that a farmer would be inconvenienced if he had to send for a Government representative or had to give notice, because he might want to start up upon a day's notice or an hour's notice, I understand from a suggestion made to me by a colleague sitting by my side that fermentation would require three days' time. So he could not be inconvenienced to the extent the Senator suggested. Now, I do not know anything about distillation and I do not know anything about the force of that suggestion, but I repeat what was said to me by a Senator in a chair near me only that I may have the benefit of the Senator's better knowledge of the subject in answer to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator wants an expert upon the matter of distilling he will have to go to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Neither the Senator from North Dakota nor the other Senators who are opposing this amendment have suggested that there would be great difficulty in getting storekeepers when they were wanted. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he thinks there would be any difficulty in North Dakota in finding men who would become Government officers? Does he really anticipate any trouble of that kind in finding men who will do this work and who would be located in the neighborhood, in the immediate neighborhood, of every one of these stills? Is the situation such in North Dakota that you could not find men to do this work?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will tell the Senator what I do anticipate. When we so extravagantly conduct the business of the Government that we furnish one man to stay where there is a still the year round, when it may not be in operation more than thirty days in a year, and have one man for every still in the United States, and when at the end of the year we ascertain that what we have paid out for agents to watch these stills is about four times as much as the product of the farmers' stills,

I do not think we will get much of a vote for an additional force for the next year.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a matter of the future, and it is a matter, of course, for Congress to determine hereafter.

Now, another question. The Senator talks about farmers producing 10 gallons a day; that is, starting up a still and producing in one day 10 gallons and then stopping. Of course that is absolutely impossible; it is impracticable. Does not the Senator know as well as anyone that if you did not produce over 300 gallons a year the cost of the distilling apparatus and keeping it in order would absolutely prohibit any such production as that?

Mr. McCUMBER. From the information I have I understand absolutely to the contrary, that the cost of a small still is very little.

Mr. ALDRICH. How much?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have been informed that the whole outfit can be put in for the use of a farmer for about $150.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Less than that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Less than that, says my colleague.

Mr. ALDRICH. To produce a hundred gallons a day?

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not say to produce a hundred gallons a day.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My colleague is speaking about the production of 10 gallons a day.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am figuring about what the average farmer would produce. The Senator from Rhode Island thinks always in large sums and on large things. A farmer is not going to produce a hundred gallons a day for ten days. I dare say there would not be 1 out of 10,000 who would produce 10,000 gallons in a whole year.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Right there, I have trouble in my own mind, and I interrupt the Senator not in any controversial way, but simply to get the benefit of his views.

According to the bill anyone engaged in the distillation of denatured alcohol with a still that has a capacity not exceeding a hundred gallons a day may have the benefit of the provisions of the bill. If we are to create two classes of distillers, one of them having the advantages of this measure and allow them to distill to the extent indicated, would it not be that nearly everybody, in order to get the advantages of the measure, would engage to distill under the provision of this law?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not by any means. No man who was not a farmer could afford to run a still that would produce less than 100 gallons a day, and the farmer could not afford to do it if he had to hire help to do it.

Mr. FULTON. I call the Senator's attention——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I call attention to the further fact that they would all have to go into producing denatured alcohol. This section applies only to denatured alcohol. It is confined to distilleries producing less than a hundred gallons a day for denaturization only.

Mr. LODGE. If not supervised they can produce anything they choose.

Mr. ALDRICH. That alcohol can be made the same as other alcohol and transported before it is denatured.

Mr. ALLISON. A thousand miles away.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; lots of things can be done that would not be done. There is no doubt about that. It is not contemplated by this law that that would be done. I call the attention of Senators to the fact that the bill contemplates two classes of distillers—one engaged in producing alcohol for industrial purposes, another engaged in producing alcohol for all purposes, and more particularly as a beverage. Now, should not the one engaged in the industrial enterprise have the benefit or greater advantage?

Mr. FORAKER. What I want to do is to help that class, I will say, who will be engaged in producing denatured alcohol for the benefit of the industries. I want to print in the RECORD the telegram which I received a few moments ago.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let it be read. I should like to hear it.

Mr. FORAKER. There is no objection to its being read. It is a telegram, as I said, from distillers asking me to oppose this measure in its amended form. I do not know anything about the measure, as I said, except as I found it to be after receiving the telegrams.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Do the distillers referred to belong to the distillers' trust spoken of by the Senator from Rhode Island, or are they of an independent character?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know anything about that. I only know that they are distillers. I know nothing about the distillery trust. I only know there are certain gentlemen in Cincinnati, whose names are familiar to me, who are engaged as distillers there, and that the telegram is signed by a number of them. I do not know whether they are independent or in the trust.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from Ohio was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] a while ago stated that the distillers' trust was promoting this bill. That is the reason why I asked the question. I did not do so in an offensive way.

Mr. FORAKER. In connection with the reading of the telegram, I want to repeat rather what I said a moment ago, that I have had no opportunity to give this matter any study at all. I never had an opportunity to read the bill until I got that telegram a while ago, when I sent in and got it. I have a number of letters from constituents that have been coming in for some weeks, asking me to favor a bill of this general character, but I have been so busily occupied I had no time. I sent for the bill that I might read it, and I am asking no questions here in a controversial sense, but only that I may get information that will enable me to act intelligently. All I know about the telegram is that it is signed by gentlemen who are engaged in the distilling business and who have asked me to oppose this measure in its amended form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

CINCINNATI, OHIO, February 27, 1907.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER.
No. 1500 Sixteenth street, Washington, D. C.:

The amended denatured-alcohol bill now under consideration is a great menance to the distilling interest. Not only will it seriously affect the revenues of the Government, but places the industry in hands of monopoly and opens the door to fraud. We hope you will use every endeavor to defeat this measure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say for the information of the Senator from North Dakota that those are independent distillers who appeared before the committee in opposition to this bill, and not members of the trust.

Mr. FORAKER. I supposed so, but I did not know anything about it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My information is that what is known as the "distillers' trust," or the Distillers' Security Company, I think, perhaps, is the legal term, manufacture about 20 per cent of the total amount of whisky or alcohol in the United States; the other 80 per cent is manufactured by the independent distillers, and it is the latter class who are opposing this bill.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words about the bill, being a member of the Committee on Finance and having assented to the amendment.

I am not distressed about these telegrams as to their origin. I have observed from some experience upon the Committee on Finance and other committees of this body that there are very large interests in our country that are affected more or less by our legislation here, and that when they are they in some form endeavor to make their wishes and desires known. I have had that experience for some years.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. We have all had it.

Mr. ALLISON. I have also observed that, as a rule, the gentlemen who advise us about our affairs here have some personal interest in one form or another as respects the advice they give us. I have no doubt that the distilling business of the country at this time feels that it has an interest in this question, as I have no doubt it has.

I am, for one, in favor of the largest possible measure that will enable the farmer and other good people to manufacture spirits or alcohol that may be used for purposes outside of uses for beverage purposes—in the arts, for motive power, and for all the industrial purposes of our country. That has been done in other countries. It is done now to a limited extent in France and in Great Britain, and to a very large degree in Germany.

I hope that we can from time to time put upon our statute books such legislation as will enable us to carry on, upon the farm and in the mechanic's shop and in the factory, production and manufacture by the use of alcohol or its products for economic purposes.

But there is another matter that I have tried in the consideration of this subject to care for, and that is the revenues of the Government. I believe that is important in the consideration and preparation of this bill. It has been my fortune to have had this question in a greater or lesser degree before me in the other House and in this body for a great many years. I remember perfectly well that in 1867, although we had a tax of $2 per gallon upon distilled spirits, the price of those spirits during that year was reduced from 50 to 75 cents a gallon. Everybody knew that extensive frauds were going on in the production of distilled spirits. Nearly everybody who investigated the subject knew that it was largely because of the enormous inducement under our laws to fraudulently manufacture distilled spirits and put them upon the market, because whoever could manufacture spirits without paying the tax was enabled, of course, to secure a price for that product which would approximate at least the price of the article which had paid the tax required by the Government. So in 1868 there was a measure prepared in the House of Representatives, which is substantially and practically as respects these safeguards the present law, wherein provision was made for the registry of every barrel of distilled spirits and wherein it was provided that such spirits should be watched, through supervisors, from the initiative point down to the point practically of the retail dealer, and that is the law now.

It was also provided in that law of 1868 that the tax upon distilled spirits should be reduced to 50 cents a gallon. It is true that the following year, after the tax was fixed at 50 cents a gallon, there was more than twice as much revenue raised from it as there had been at $2 a gallon. That tax was raised gradually, by a process with which we are all familiar, from 50 cents a gallon to $1.10 a gallon, at which it now stands.

It is therefore, it seems to me, incumbent upon us, whilst we are changing these laws in order to exempt certain producers of distilled spirits from the operation of this stringent and just law, that we shall throw around these changes such safeguards as will certainly prevent or, if not entirely prevent, at least minimize absolutely the loss of revenue that is to be derived from that source.

I take it for granted that there is not a Senator here who does not believe that we, under our present laws, or under any laws likely to be formulated in the near future, will embody within our taxation system a provision for raising a large sum from distilled spirits. Last year we raised $137,000,000 from distilled spirits alone—those spirits being used as a beverage in our country—and no matter what system of taxation we shall adopt hereafter we are certain at least to seek to secure a like sum from distilled spirits.

In this measure there are safeguards thrown around this subject without the amendment proposed by the committee, to which I assented. Those safeguards consist of the adoption of an experimental system which will permit a distillery to be established producing 100 or less gallons a day and the construction upon the distillery premises of a denaturing plant. It also provides that such spirits may be drawn from the tank and sent in closed, locked tanks all over the country. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue said, in his statement before the Committee on Finance, that he believed these safeguards would probably be sufficient to secure honest administration; but he also stated to us that it was an experiment. From our past experience we can not afford to so lift up or loosen the safeguards as to seriously threaten our revenue. That was the statement of the Commissioner. I believe that by experimentation and by from time to time throwing safeguards around the production of denatured alcohol we can reach a conclusion whereby it may be safely produced throughout the country.

I do not agree with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that a farmer can come in from his plow in the morning on account of a shower of rain, open up his distillery, and distill a few gallons of spirits, or that after he comes home from his labors in the daytime that he and his little family can open up the distillery and make alcohol for an hour or two in the evening. [Laughter.]

You know that is an impossibility. All experience discloses that, in order to make alcohol or distilled proof spirits, it is necessary to treat the grain two or three times before it reaches even the point of dripping alcohol. The laws which we passed in 1868 required that for sour mash—whatever that is [laughter]—it must be fermented seventy-two hours before it can be drawn off, and for what are known as "sweet wines" the fermentation must be ninety-six hours. That is the positive requirement as respects the mash. I see my good friend from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] nods assent. He has had large experience in that business [laughter]—I mean as Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of course.

Mr. SCOTT. It is not necessary for the Senator from Iowa to apologize.

Mr. ALLISON. What I have stated being true, it will be found that no farmer, or at least no farmer having an economical spirit and a knowledge of what is profitable, would undertake to open up his distillery unless when he opened it up and built his fires and prepared his vessels for the mash and built his tanks, he became satisfied that there were to be at least thirty days of rain or thirty days of quiet on the farm.

Therefore, Mr. President, I do not see what danger there is to the farmer in the provision that he must have a storekeeper present when he is engaged in this business. There is no law that requires a storekeeper at any time to be in a distillery, small or great, unless it be at the time the distillery is actually engaged in the business of producing distilled spirits or alcohol.

The little distilleries that have been scattered around in the mountains of Kentucky, North Carolina, and other States—I do not speak now disparagingly of those States, but only speak of them as illustrations of mountain States where they have the raw material to produce distilled spirits——

Mr. CARTER. And the disposition to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the committee amendment all these little distilleries, of which there are four or five hundred, for every moment of time that they are in operation will have an officer of the internal revenue present. That officer of the internal revenue is paid only when he is performing work at the distillery. He is paid by the day. So that if one of these small distillers, whether a grain distiller or otherwise, wants an internal-revenue storekeeper, he gives notice to the collector, and generally to the storekeeper himself—because the storekeeper is somewhere in the neighborhood—that he has a distillery; that on a certain day, three or four or five days hence, he intends to start his fire, gather his raw material, and open up his distillery. When that is done the storekeeper appears and he is paid for the number of days that he remains at that distillery, while the operation of distilling alcohol or spirits is going on.

I do not apprehend any great difficulty in the matter of having a storekeeper present at any time when it will be thought reasonably profitable for a farmer to engage in the manufacture of alcohol. Surely, if he is to manufacture alcohol to be put into a tank and transport it to a distant place for denaturing, he can not afford to put into that tank less than 40, 50, or it may be 500 gallons. If, instead of sending the alcohol away to be denatured, he proposes to establish a denaturing plant on his own premises, he can not afford to do that to secure the alcohol that he is likely to use or the alcohol that his neighbors are likely to use. No farmer can afford to have a denaturing plant on his farm unless he intends to produce a considerable amount of denatured alcohol.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think the amendment provides a safeguard while we are testing this business. For myself, I have only considered it a temporary safeguard until we can see how the system will work in our country. It will not retard, it can not retard, the development of this industry anywhere, because it entails no expense to the farmer, and the farmer is not going to engage in it unless he has such a farm and lives in such a neighborhood as will justify him in expending a hundred and fifty dollars for a still, if you please, and two hundred or five hundred dollars for the apparatus connected with the still, which will be required by this bill itself.

So, Mr. President, I have consented to this amendment because I believe it is in the nature of making progress in a direction which we all desire and what I know my people want very much. At the same time, I am sure they also want to make the carrying on of the business safe to the Government.

Now, as to the parallel with the fruit distilleries I want to say a word, and then I will conclude. Why was it that in the original law we provided that brandy made from apples, peaches, and grapes should be exempt from restrictions, except as to the payment of the tax? Such brandies are made from three articles, one of which matures in August, another in September, and another perhaps later—in other words, when that exception was made it was for the purpose of allowing small farmers having these three fruits to convert them into brandy in States like Virginia, Maryland, etc., and——

Mr. KEAN. And New Jersey.

Mr. ALLISON. And New Jersey, though I have never tasted any of the New Jersey product. [Laughter.] Mr. President, that industry developed wonderfully, and I speak from knowledge when I say that it has developed in such a degree in California, where great distilleries have been established, where great vineyards have sprung up, and where there are large wine-producing establishments, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue maintains now, as he has for several years, officers about the grape-brandy distilleries, in order to see whether or not the distillers are observing the law, although they were relieved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from the drastic provision of constant inspection. So that you can not draw a parallel between a product that is produced in such a way as only to be used for a very brief period and a product that is produced in every part of the United States and can be used anywhere.

I agree with the Senator from North Dakota that the farmers are honest men as a rule. I also agree with him that they would probably in no way undertake to violate this law; but if we open this door in the beginning, without testing it, I am afraid that there would be new farmers appearing in my State and in the State of North Dakota whom we would find, although nominally raising grain, would in some way be producing alcohol during the small midnight hours.

Experimentally, I do not know what would be the result if the amendment be not agreed to; but I know that it will not retard, or, at least, I believe it will not retard, the progress that we are making in this matter. I believe that it is a very good safeguard as respects the revenue.

I merely desired to say this much, Mr. President, inasmuch as I was responsible, as one member of the Committee on Finance, for the reporting of the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am learning two lessons, at least, from this discussion. One is on the art of distilling and the other upon the science of Government finances. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] says that we should consider almost as important as any other feature the revenue-producing element of this measure. I will agree with him, Mr. President, that that is quite proper, but I want to ask if he will not also agree with me that any system which makes the cost of collecting $1 at least $2 is worthy of a great deal of consideration; and that will absolutely be the effect of this bill so far as it relates to the production of alcohol upon the farm. In other words, if the farmer can work a still of such small capacity that he can afford to run it for the purpose of utilizing his waste products, it will not produce enough to pay the expenses of keeping a Government agent there while he is running his still.

Let us suppose, now, that there are ten farmers in a single county in my State, a county which will average 50 miles square, who are engaged in this business. They may all want to start their stills about the same time of the year and they may all desire the presence of the inspector at the same time; but they can not get him. He has got to travel several hundred miles, possibly in a single county, assuming that there will be but ten engaged in this business in a county of this size. When he is ready to go on with his work, the other nine or ten may all happen to be ready at the same time. So one man has either got to wait and abide the convenience of a Government agent, or else all of them will have to have a separate and distinct Government inspector. The cost in either case, in my opinion, measured by what the Government would save in the matter of fraud, would be at least ten dollars to one. In other words, it would cost the Government of the United States in inspectors at least $10 where the Government would save $1 because fraud might be committed.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. First, if there were ten distilleries within an area of 50 miles, each desiring a supervisor on the same day, it is probable that ten supervisors could be found within an easy reach of the area of 50 miles who would be willing to go to these different distilleries. That is exactly the way it is done in Kentucky. They have a sufficient number of supervisors to provide one for each distiller as he desires one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but, Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. Wait a moment. I want to answer the whole question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, as to the question of cost, of course this denatured alcohol pays no tax. Therefore the service, so far as taxation is concerned, is a gratuity. But while these ten good, honest farmers are lawfully conducting their distilleries within the area of 50 miles, it is just possible that some other ten men or one man might be extracting at least 50 gallons during the thirty days from his distillery, which would cost the Government twice as much as it would to maintain an inspector there. In other words, the object of having these inspectors is to save the aggregate revenue derived from distilled spirits from the effect of fraud throughout the United States. That is all there is to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but let us apply that. It is safe to say that the average farmer of the United States would not raise over a thousand bushels of potatoes, we will say, or its equivalent in any character of grain, which he would use for this purpose. Suppose a thousand bushels would make a thousand gallons, which it will not, and I do not suppose it will make more than five to six hundred gallons, possibly, of denatured alcohol. However, let us suppose that we get the same character of potatoes that they have in Germany, and suppose the farmer should produce a thousand gallons. Those thousand gallons, at 30 cents a gallon even, would be worth $300. It is safe to say that he would not in a year, with the average of these stills, if they are going to be profitable at all, make more than $150 a year; and if he did that, the cost and expense of keeping the necessary agents or inspector would about equal the value of the entire produce of the farm used for this purpose.

I want the Senator to separate the farm product from the product of the great stills, not running at a hundred gallons a day or anything like it, but those which are running at all are running, perhaps, to the extent of many thousands of gallons a day. By reason of the great amount that can be done in a day they can economize so that they can manufacture the product profitably. The farmer can not make the alcohol profitably on his little farm, and with a little still, except as he offsets his labor against what he will receive, and in my opinion he will receive mighty small compensation for his labor under any conditions.

But I want to give him the benefit of this law which he supposed was to be for his benefit. I do not believe he is going to get the benefit that is claimed. I am very doubtful if he gets any, and if I accept the argument of the Senator from Iowa that there will have to be a $500 denaturing plant on every farm where there is a little still, then of course the farmer could not afford to carry on the business at all. The interest on his investment, the repairs, etc., would exceed the value of the material that he would manufacture during the year.

Mr. ALLISON. That was a mere statement of my own. I may be entirely mistaken.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. But on the statement of the Senator from North Dakota that a still will cost a hundred and fifty dollars, the auxiliary things necessary to denature the alcohol will certainly cost a great deal more, I think. I may be mistaken——

Mr. McCUMBER. I have understood that the cost of the whole apparatus for the distilling would amount to $150.

Of course this bill provides for denaturing plants to which the farmer may ship his alcohol. He does not need to do the denaturing upon the farm.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that.

Mr. McCUMBER. So on the whole, from the arguments, I am becoming somewhat disappointed as to the good results that are going to flow to the agricultural element of this country by reason of the proposed law. But whatever results there may be, I am satisfied of one thing: While I have very slight knowledge as to the cost and expense and the process of distilling spirits, I have a pretty accurate idea of the cost and expense of conducting any kind of business upon the farm and about what a farmer can do, and I know that he can not afford to use any of these large stills upon a farm, and I know further that the Government can not afford to have an inspector present during the time that the farmer wants to do a little work.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think perhaps a careful reading of this section, which is the only section of the revenue law retained in the bill, will throw light upon the difficulties suggested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. It will be observed that by the terms of section 3284 a party may be designated as a storekeeper or by the storekeeper for the purpose of performing this duty, thus making it a neighborhood proposition. The language used in the act is:

> Every distiller or person employed in any distillery who in the absence of the storekeeper or person designated to act as storekeeper uses or causes, etc.

So far as I know, I brought into the Senate the first bill providing for the manufacture of denatured alcohol, and attempted to secure its reference to the Committee on Manufactures for consideration. Objection was made that inasmuch as it affected the revenues of the country it should go to the Committee on Finance. I yielded and withdrew the bill, having perfect confidence that the Committee on Finance, from its experience and from its composition, would be better able to deal with the question than I or the committee of which I was a member.

My attention was first drawn to this subject some years ago, and I proceeded to obtain from Germany and other countries all the literature bearing upon the subject that I could obtain and gave the subject some consideration before formulating the measure for the purpose of introducing it in the way of legislation. I had in mind then not that each individual farmer would resort to the manufacture of denatured alcohol, but that it would be a community process. The material from which denatured alcohol can be made profitably must necessarily be inexpensive—waste material. There is not much in the proposition that the farmer will use his grain or will use the bulk of his crop of potatoes for that purpose. The price at which this commodity must be produced in order that it may compete in the market as fuel or light or in the uses and purposes of the arts is such that it must be manufactured below a given cost, which is very small, and no commodity having a ready sale or use can be used for this purpose and compete in the markets with the articles with which it must come in competition.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I will ask the Senator if in his investigations he ascertained about what was the relative product of the farmers' distilleries, so called, in Germany last year and the other, or what I will call the regular distilleries?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I fail to catch the point of the Senator's question.

Mr. FULTON. I am informed by a gentleman who is in the Chamber and who has investigated the subject that last year the product of what are known as farmers' distilleries in Germany was 287,000,000 gallons, as against, in round numbers, 500,000 gallons in other distilleries.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see the point of the Senator's remark, and in the few minutes during which I shall occupy the floor I will include a reply to that suggestion.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is rather important that the figures with respect to the German production should be approximately correct. The figures are 71,000,000 instead of 287,000,000, as stated by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was about to suggest——

Mr. FULTON. I want to say in justice to the Senator from Rhode Island that he did not know about it until he asked the same gentleman from whom I got my information.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. I asked the Senator who his authority was, and when we consulted the authority he said 71,000,000 instead of 287,000,000.

Mr. FULTON. He said liters——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I can take up and finish answering the question just here.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator will allow me.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was about to say it was less than a hundred million. I was not going to deal with exact figures at all, but that is near enough. It is the principle rather than the quantity that is involved.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Oregon ought to ask his informant how much the bounty paid in Germany amounts to per gallon.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator knows who my informant is.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; but knowing the knowledge the Senator himself has on this question, I should like to ask him how much bounty is paid in Germany on the production of denatured alcohol.

Mr. FULTON. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to proceed, so as not to lose the thread of what I was saying.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. The correction I want to make in my statement is this. I used "gallons" instead of "liters," and the proportion I stated is exactly correct—287,000,000 against 500,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but of a different measure.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not very material as to the quantity. Upon careful investigation Senators will find that the method of producing this article in Germany is very much like that which I suggested that I contemplated it would be in this country—that is, a neighborhood method; a community method. The waste of the community is preserved and gathered together until there is a sufficient quantity of it. There is an organized system for the production of denatured alcohol, and it is not done on each little tract of land, but it is done in each community, and I take it that when this system is adopted in the United States to the advantage and to the profit of those for whose benefit this legislation is proposed it will be done in the neighborhoods within hauling distance.

The material out of which denatured alcohol is made is not such material as will bear transportation under the ordinary methods. It will be hauled in the wagons of the farmers and those who produce it to a neighboring center, and there the distillery will be operated, and it will not be very inconvenient for a Government officer, who does not entail any expense to the parties who are interested in the distilling process, to be present, inasmuch as the law which I have just read provides that parties may be designated for this purpose or appointed. In other words, the storekeeper will appoint as many agents as he finds it necessary in every community under existing law. That is the law now. He may appoint people who are not devoting their time exclusively to the service of the Government. They are paid only when they are performing these duties. They may be engaged in farming or in any other enterprise. He is an agent designated at a given time to go to a given place in a given community and there perform his duty under the instructions of the Department of the Government. It will not be difficult or expensive, and I am fully in accord with the idea that this is necessary in order to protect the Government against imposition under this new and experimental system.

It is probably needless to say that I am most heartily in accord with the law itself, with the system of legislation upon which we are engaged. The only thing is that we should so enact it and so protect it that it shall not prove a fraud that will discredit the system in the very beginning of our experience.

I had my attention called to this fact early in my investigation of this question. It is not only the farmers' produce. There are vast quantities of sawdust that accumulate under the saw, millions of tons of it, which constitutes available material for making alcohol. There are all our sugar-beet fields in the West. In Idaho's fields alone last year, subject to this process, were thousands upon thousands of tons, and the fields of the State produced only 50,000 tons of sugar last year. That refuse is all available for this purpose. The fact that it remains in a pile collected for the purpose and ferments or even rots does not materially deteriorate it for this use. It is not necessary, immediately upon the gathering together of this refuse, that you shall commence to distil it. It is not injured or lessened in its value by remaining in bulk until such time as you are ready to engage in this process.

Denatured alcohol is going to be a strong competitor in the arts, for heat, for light, for power, sometimes by direct application, sometimes by reproducing itself in another form of power, and it is of very great importance that the bill should not be so framed as to make its operation obnoxious and bring about a reaction of sentiment that would undo all we have gained thus far. I can see no very serious disadvantage in having in each neighborhood a fixed number of storekeepers, appointed by the Government, to be on hand whenever they are needed. It is not at all probable that each individual farmer will set up a still, but it is probable that each community within easy hauling distance will set up a distilling plant and a denaturing plant and that it will be operated with convenience to the entire neighborhood, the product being one easily divisible by gallons.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word in response to what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has said. If we adopt section 3284, which we practically do if we agree to the amendment proposed by the committee, it will be utterly impossible for the owner of the material mentioned by the Senator from Idaho—any sawdust or any waste product from the beet farms—to have a particle of it handled in any way if he intends to use it for alcohol purposes unless there is a storekeeper there at the time. He could not even take a shovel and transfer a half ton of sawdust from one place to another unless a storekeeper were present.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is such a strained construction of the law, which has been so long in effect that we know its operation, that I can not think the Senator can be serious in his suggestion.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Read the statute iself.

Mr. HEYBURN. It has been interpreted and applied for years. You are not prevented from moving wheat from one bin to another or corn from the wagon to the crib.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let me read the statute.

Every distiller or person employed in any distillery who, in the absence of the storekeeper, or person designated to act as storekeeper, uses, or causes or permits to be used, any material for the purpose of making mash, wort, or beer, or for the production of spirits, or removes any spirits, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of taxes, etc.

"Removes" how? At any time and at any place.

Mr. HEYBURN. Could you not take wheat from the bag to the bin?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The farmer who has a small distillery would be prohibited from hauling a load of potatoes and putting them into the bin with the intention of using them for the purpose of making alcohol unless there was a storekeeper there at the time, and that is why I object to this amendment. It is absolutely prohibitive, as the Senator from Maine said a while ago.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator would not carry it so far as to say that the storekeeper must be present when the potatoes were sown?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No; I would not, but the statute would, if you reenact the statute in this bill.

Mr. ALDRICH obtained the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a conference report which I wish to submit.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If the bill is to go over, I suppose it is understood that it is the unfinished business.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, yes; certainly. I withhold the motion for an executive session for the time being, in order to allow routine business to be transacted.

BALTIMORE AND WASHINGTON TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. I will state that the Senate has passed precisely a similar bill with a change of two words, and I ask for the present consideration of this bill. It will have to go back to the House.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, on page 4, line 19, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" and in line 22, before the word "of," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. JOINT COMMITTEE ON REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution No. 240.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 240) to create a joint committee to consider the revision and codification of the laws of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a joint special committee be appointed, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice-President from members of the Sixtieth Congress, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker from the Members of the Sixtieth Congress, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws reported by the statutory revision commission heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, including the laws of the last session of the Fifty-ninth Congress; and that the said joint committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary assistants, to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expense as may be deemed necessary, all such expense to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to discharge the committee from further consideration of the joint resolution which has just been read. The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

RATES OF INTEREST CHARGED BY BANKS IN NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. I rise for the purpose of making a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. There are so many privileged matters.

Mr. SULZER. This is a motion to discharge the Committee on Banking and Currency from the consideration of a privileged resolution of the House, No. 869, introduced by myself on February 20, which has been before the committee for more than a week, and the committee has not reported on it; and the matter is now privileged. I send it to the Clerk's desk, and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair can not recognize the gentleman at this time, because there is a special order that is operating on the merchant-marine bill which excepts motions to suspend the rules, general appropriation bills, conference reports, and other privileged matters.

Mr. SULZER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent, then.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair is not at this time recognizing the gentleman for unanimous consent, but will ask the gentleman if it will lead to debate?

Mr. SULZER. It will not lead to debate.

The SPEAKER. For the information of the House the Clerk will read.

Mr. SULZER. The resolution calls on the Secretary of the Treasury for some information.

House resolution No. 869.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public service, to send to the House of Representatives a statement of the rates of interest charged by twenty-five or more of the largest national banks in the city of New York, doing business under and by virtue of the national banking law, at 11 o'clock in the morning and at 2 o'clock in the afternoon on call loans on each banking day from September 1, 1905, to and including the 1st day of September, 1907, and whether said rates of interest on call loans during said period of time were made and charged by said national banks, or any of them, by agreement, expressed or implied, and such other data or information in connection with the subject-matter as the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem proper and expedient.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that requires investigation by the Secretary of the Treasury, not merely a report of facts in his office.

The SPEAKER. This is a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, then, I object.

Mr. SULZER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I now move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It does not present a question of privilege at this time.

Mr. SULZER. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Well, objection is made to its consideration by the gentleman from New York.

ARMY AND NAVY UNION DISTINCTIVE BADGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following House joint resolution, with Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 31) recognizing the change of name of the Regular Army and Navy Union of the United States to the Army and Navy Union of the United States of America.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the joint resolution of May 11, 1894, 28 Statutes at Large, page 583, be, and the same is hereby, amended by changing the name and title therein described from "Regular Army and Navy Union of the United States" to "Army and Navy Union of the United States of America," and that the organization so last entitled shall have all the rights and privileges conferred by and described in said joint resolution of May 11, 1894.

With a Senate amendment, which was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the distinctive badge adopted by the Army and Navy Union of the United States may be worn, in their own right, upon all public occasions of ceremony by officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy of the United States who are members of said organization."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, is this a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. HULL. I move that the House concur.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order, while it is on the Speaker's table, it seems to the Chair that it would require unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, reserving the right to object, I want to find out what this is. Why can not any American citizen wear any special badge he wants to anyhow?

Mr. HULL. Because we have passed a resolution through here making the Regular Army and Navy Union badge so that no one else can wear that badge or anything similar. There are two organizations now. One was called the "Regular Army and Navy Union," which is limited to the Regular Army only, and which is protected by law. The new organization, which is now a much larger one, takes into the union both regulars and volunteers. They have adopted the badge similar to the Regular Army and Navy Union as their own. I will say to the gentleman that nearly all the retired officers and enlisted men are members, and they are not permitted to wear the badge of their order now on occasions of ceremony. I can see no objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why are they not permitted? What prevents them?

Mr. HULL. Because we have not passed a resolution authorizing them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that a man who is in the Army or the Navy, or has been, can not wear it because Congress has not authorized it?

Mr. HULL. He can not wear it on occasions of ceremony. I suppose anybody could wear it. For instance, I wear the Loyal Legion button. Congress authorized it and confined it to members. I suppose anybody could wear it. But this legislation protects it.

Mr. MANN. What you want to do is to limit its use?

Mr. HULL. We want to fix it so that they have the same rights as the other body in the Regular Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would prevent any member of any organization, being a free American citizen, from wearing the badge of that organization?

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, then, if Congress has not done it, what is the necessity for it?

Mr. HULL. Let me illustrate. Congress passed a resolution allowing all members of the Loyal Legion to wear this badge, but the gentleman from Mississippi could put it on and wear it, too.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; except if I was doing it with fraudulent intent, and had received some honor or emolument thereby.

Mr. HULL. We have done this for all the military orders. It simply gives them the exclusive right to wear this badge. Now, there is no question but that they can wear their badge anyhow, but it does not prevent any other man who has been in the Army wearing it, if he wants to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is nothing to prevent any man from wearing a Masonic button except the fact that he does not belong to the Masons. There is nothing to prevent a man from wearing a Knight of Pythias badge; there is nothing to prevent him from wearing the cross of the Confederacy. I do not want to object to this legislation, because it will place me, I am afraid, in a false attitude, but it does seem to me that we ought not to be legislating and establishing military orders in a sort of a way.

Mr. HULL. This only gives them the exclusive right to wear this badge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We are getting where we are guarding the citizen from everything in the world, even from a lie; for that is all it is, a lie.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Am I mistaken in understanding that the intent of this resolution is to authorize men in the service to wear this badge of their order while in uniform?

Mr. HULL. No; the regulations of the War Department would regulate that. They let them wear certain decorations; they can wear the Loyal Legion, and the Grand Army, and if this is passed they could wear this on all occasions of ceremony—if passed, the regulation of the War Department would not be against it.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not that the intent of this resolution?

Mr. HULL. That is one reason for it; it is also to protect their badge from being worn by outsiders.

Mr. MANN. How many of these orders are there?

Mr. HULL. The Loyal Legion, the Grand Army——

Mr. MANN. And if we pass this there will be three now. How long will it be before there will be thirty?

Mr. HULL. It is hardly possible that they would subdivide it to that extent. This is the largest one affecting the Regular Army.

Mr. MANN. These men are not all in the Regular Army, are they?

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; they are not all in the Regular Army. This organization takes in all in the Volunteer Army as well as in the Regular Army. It is to break down the dividing line between the two services and put them on a common level.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bill operates outside the District of Columbia?

Mr. HULL. It operates all over the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. What jurisdiction has the Congress over such a matter as this?

Mr. HULL. That would be a legal question.

Mr. MANN. What penalty does it put upon somebody else who wears the badge?

Mr. HULL. None at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS ON PUGET SOUND.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries from the further consideration of the following Senate bill, and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington moves to discharge the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries from further consideration of the bill S. 1462, suspend the rules, and pass the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of one or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound, State of Washington, for the propagation of salmon and other food fishes, including purchase of sites, construction of buildings and ponds, purchase and hire of boats and equipment, and such temporary help as may be required for the construction and operation of the fish-cultural stations, at a suitable point or points to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the number of said fish-cultural stations to be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SULZER. So was mine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that under the special order covering the merchant-marine bill it has the right of way except for appropriation bills, conference reports, and motions to suspend the rules. This is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Washington to the fact that the bill is not at the desk. The Chair presumes the bill is on the files of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The gentleman can send for the bill while debate is going on. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that a second be considered as ordered?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to know if this bill has been reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

The SPEAKER. No; this is a motion to discharge the commitee from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. That was my motion a while ago. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is quite mistaken. The gentleman's request was for unanimous consent; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objected. That is an entirely different proposition. This is a motion to suspend the rules, which is excepted under the rule with respect to the merchant-marine bill, which the House is discussing in Committee of the Whole. With the keen intellect and quick perception of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], the Chair is quite sure that the gentleman will recognize the difference. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall make my motion at some subsequent time and in the Speaker's own way. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman starts I wish he would tell the House why it is that the committee has not reported this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is what I expect to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But first tell us whether this makes a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It does provide for an appropriation of $50,000, or as much as may be necessary, for the construction of two fish hatcheries on Puget Sound. Now I will answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] if he will give me attention. The reason why this was not reported from our committee was this, that it was hoped that what was known as the "omnibus fishery bill" might come up and be passed at this session of Congress; but having failed so far to accomplish that purpose, the members of that committee agreed that I might call this up in this manner, as the fishing industry on Puget Sound is so large, and this being an exceptional case.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the fishing business is so large on Puget Sound, that means that there are many fishes there and many kinds. So what do you want with a hatchery there? [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is the gentleman through? I want the gentleman to finish his question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do you want to take $50,000 away from some other place where there are no fish, like Tennessee, and take it to where there are so many fishes that you can not get half of them out of the sea?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman is through, I will answer his question. In answering the gentleman's question I wish to read from a Government publication. The publication is not yet in book form, but I read from the proof. One paragraph here shows the necessity for it:

> In 1904 the fisheries of Washington supported 50 fishing vessels, with a tonnage of 1,540 tons, of the value of $134,600; 80 transport vessels, with a tonnage of 1,247, and a value of $261,300; 63 gasoline boats, valued at $44,300, and 3,444 sail and row boats, valued at $309,610. The principal apparatus were 250 seines, 1,538 gill nets, and 602 pound nets. The total value of vessels, boats, fishing apparatus, shore properties, and cash capital invested was $5,319,201, as against $6,601,243 in 1889, the year shown previous to the last canvas on the Pacific coast. The number of persons engaged in 1904 was 8,000, an increase of 1,882 since 1889. The product amounted to 88,945,790 pounds, to the value of $2,962,633 for the fishermen, a decrease of 31,632,936 pounds.

Now, why we want fish hatcheries there is because that great fishing industry is constantly decreasing, and many of the most valuable fishes have already disappeared.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that the fish are diminishing in number?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; very greatly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many kinds of fish are there there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The main fish is the salmon, although there are a great many others.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, if the gentleman will go down to Florida he will get all the fish that he wants, including porpoise and shark. I did not catch them all the other day, but I caught a good many.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that the committee has reported this bill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; it has not.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee had agreed to allow him to call it up. Under the rules of the House there is one way in which a committee indicates its desire or willingness that the matter be brought before the House, and that is by a report. How does it happen in this particular case that the committee, as the gentleman says, instead of having reported the bill in the regular way, has indicated in some way to the gentleman its willingness that this bill be brought up?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I wish the gentleman would finish his question so that I can answer it, and not take up all of the time.

Mr. MONDELL. I have finished.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I should not have said, if I did, that as a committee, but individuals of that committee have all personally expressed a willingness that this should be called up, and all expressed an opinion that it ought to be passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the question the gentleman did not answer is, Why didn't they make a report?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I explained that a moment ago. We have not had any opportunity since that time; we hoped to be able to pass this omnibus bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose the gentleman is aware of the fact that this committee has reported a bill for twenty-seven fish hatcheries.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not understand what the gentleman said.

Mr. MONDELL. I presume the gentleman is aware of the fact that the committee has unanimously reported a bill for twenty-seven fish hatcheries in different States of the Union, and that bill has been on the Calendar for a year and there has been no opportunity to have it presented here.

Mr. MANN. It was recalled.

Mr. MONDELL. It went back, but was reported again.

Mr. MANN. It went on the Calendar last year, but went back to the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this request comes in without a report of the committee in its behalf. I know not much if anything about the merits of the particular bill. I do, however, know that very many bills have been introduced for fish hatcheries, and the committee in a regular way has made a report in an omnibus fish-hatchery bill containing twenty-seven hatcheries. I do not think it is fair and right to single out one of them and give the House an opportunity to pass upon it while the House is deprived of all opportunity to pass upon the other twenty-six. [Applause.] I think I have no objection to the bill upon its own merits and think I would be glad to vote for the omnibus bill. That bill was regularly reported by the committee and has been upon the Calendar and is ready to be taken up in an orderly course of things for the consideration of the House. Now there comes one project, presented without a report of the committee, outside of the ordinary procedure of the House, and it would look to me as if favoritism were being extended to one of our Members at the expense of very many others. That is the gravamen of my objection to the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SOUTHARD. Is this one of the twenty-seven?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One of the twenty-seven. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield two minutes to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has reported an omnibus bill providing for twenty-seven fish hatcheries. Now, this may be the most meritorious of all the twenty-seven, and had the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in a regular way reported this bill and by expressing its views and desires to the House indicated that this of all the twenty-seven was the most meritorious, then I should have had no objection to the passage of the bill. I should have been glad indeed to have followed the view of the committee, that this of all the fish hatcheries proposed in the omnibus bill was the most important and the most meritorious.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman permit a question? Is the gentleman aware in all the period of the Government up to this time, only twenty-eight fish hatcheries have been authorized in the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not know that to be a fact until the gentleman stated it.

Mr. PAYNE. In all the United States, and this omnibus bill calls for twenty-seven, and it is utterly impossible to give twenty-seven fish hatcheries at this session of Congress, and why not take up one of the most meritorious of the fish hatcheries, that of a salmon fish hatchery, and put this through?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to my friend from New York that had the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries declared to the House in report of the committee in the regular way that this was the most important and meritorious of the twenty-seven hatcheries proposed, I for one would have been glad indeed to have voted for the bill, but this bill comes here with a proposition to suspend the rules and discharge the committee without any official knowledge on the part of the House as to the attitude of the committee on the question, and we are asked to vote for this one fish hatchery, which the committee has favorably reported upon as a separate proposition, and I for one do not believe it ought to pass.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. PADGETT. Why is this one given recognition and no other can get recognition?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has not propounded his inquiry to the proper party. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This bill may be very meritorious, but it ought not to come up here in a partial and unfair way; and I submit, in all candor, that while I should like to help the gentleman in a purely local project, here is an omnibus bill and there are twenty-seven hatcheries to be covered in that bill. But it is not reported. Here is one bill out of the twenty-seven bills picked out, and it is to be heard and passed. Are the other twenty-six without merit? No one says they are. Every section of the country, Mr. Speaker, wants a fish hatchery. Moreover, it is suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi that the gentleman who asks this favor—a favor, I will say, granted first by the Speaker by giving him recognition—is a member of this committee. He does not say that the other twenty-six bills are without merit. On the contrary, the presumption is that they are bills of merit. But it involves the question of dollars and cents. Now, then, he comes and gets a special favor to build a fishery in a country where there are many, many fishes, Mr. Speaker, and many kinds, while other territories in the United States have not fisheries, have not any hatcheries, and have not any fishes of any account. The entire South, practically, is devoid of any fish hatcheries, Mr. Speaker. Other sections are in the same fix. It seems to me that this is granting a very valuable and unfair distinction to the gentleman. He comes here and asks to discharge his own committee and leave twenty-six bills unattended to and to have a pet measure of his passed, and all the others are to go over to the Sixtieth Congress, and possibly indefinitely, and perhaps entirely defeated. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a $50,000 expenditure appropriated under these circumstances, making this invidious distinction in a matter that is national, is unjust to the balance of the country and is unjust to the balance of the Members of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] to consume some of his time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I believe that I have but a little left.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will yield to anyone else. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to mention this, too, for the consideration of the House. This bill involves a charge upon the Treasury of $50,000. It is not only extending a special favor to this particular bill in that it takes it out of the rule which has been made to apply to other hatchery bills, but it takes it out of the rule of the Speaker, which I understand to apply to recognition for the consideration of bills involving a charge upon the Treasury. We understand it to be the case that gentlemen with bills involving a charge upon the Treasury will not be recognized for unanimous consent or to move a suspension of the rules. If that be the case, then the rule ought to work evenly and uniformly with all Members of the House.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fourteen minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] three minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is just a bit of misunderstanding in regard to the motion made by the gentleman from Washington and the reason for it. There was reported out of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries an omnibus fish-hatchery bill carrying appropriations for the creation of fish hatcheries in many of the States. I for one believe that that bill ought to have been considered. I believe the appropriations called for by that bill would be wise appropriations, but I never yet have been willing to take the position of refusing support to a project that was entitled to it simply because I could not get something else that I also thought ought to be allowed. Now, it is giving a special advantage to the gentleman from Washington to have this bill considered, but there is a reason, in my judgment, for that special advantage, and that reason is that the salmon industry in the State of Washington is a very great one. That industry is being imperiled, and it is probable that without something being done to restock those streams with salmon many millions will be lost to the people in the reduction of this great food supply. I believe the bill is of more importance than any other fish-hatchery bill before this House.

And believing that it is of more importance than any other one bill, and I might say in passing that I have introduced a bill providing for a fish hatchery for the State of Kentucky, which was carried in the omnibus bill and which I would like exceedingly well to see passed, I am not willing, simply because that is not going to happen, to prevent the establishment of this hatchery in the State of Washington, for I believe that economically it is a wise expenditure of the money. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are but twenty-eight fish hatcheries in the United States. In all the fifty years we have been locating fish hatcheries, there has not been sufficient pressure to produce more than twenty-eight of these concessions. We have a State fish hatchery in our State, supported by the State. Of course I am not informed, and I do not know whether there is in this omnibus bill one for the State of New York or not, and I do not care. It is not practicable to pass an omnibus bill, with twenty-seven fish hatcheries, at this session of Congress, thereby doubling those that now exist. This one I understand, from the reading of the bill, was to cost $50,000. Of course multiply that by 27, and you have got a large increase in the appropriations for this session.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, that being so——

Mr. PADGETT. It will not take more than a minute.

Mr. PAYNE. I have only three minutes, and can not yield.

That being so, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we should not sit here with fish-hatchery bills in our pockets, like the dog in the manger, and say because we can not get ours that this one shall not pass. This is for the great Puget Sound region; a region that produces the principal part of salmon for the country—I may also say for the world—a great big industry which ought to be fostered, and this bill ought to pass whether any other fish-hatchery bill passes at this session of Congress or not. I trust that Members of the House who have not considered this matter will consider it upon the basis of the reasonableness of this proposition; that they will take this hatchery on its own merits, and decide whether it is wise to locate a hatchery there; and if gentlemen recognize that at this time there are twenty-seven demanding recognition, when there are only twenty-eight in the United States now, we can not pass them in this wholesale manner, thereby piling up the total of our appropriations for this session of Congress. I hope they will decide it simply on the merits of the case and vote for this provision for a fish hatchery at Puget Sound.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in what I have to say I have no hostility to the proposition of the gentleman from the State of Washington. I think his project is a meritorious one; but I do think it is a little peculiar, a little strange, that this one, included in the omnibus bill, should be singled out, and that he can get recognition when nobody else can. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] a moment ago declined to yield to a question, and stated that this bill carried $50,000, and that would mean $50,000 for the twenty-six others. That is not the fact. The remainder are for $20,000 each. This is the single $50,000 proposition in the bill, and all the others are for $20,000 each. Quite a difference. The gentleman from New York says that in all the history of the country we have established but twenty-eight fish hatcheries. But let it not be forgotten that there is such a demand upon the country, the country realizes the necessity for many more fish hatcheries, and that Congress has been derelict in its duty in this matter, and the committee has felt itself called upon to report twenty-seven bills at the present session of Congress in order to meet the demands and the pressing necessities of the country. While there is a necessity in the State of Washington—and this is a meritorious project—there is a necessity in other States just as great, just as deserving, which have received the sanction and the approval of the committee and which are denied recognition by the Speaker and consideration in the House. Now, I desire to protest against that method of treating other Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of anyone else who desires time, and I yield to the Chair the balance of the time on this side.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], who is a member of the committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the bill reported by the committee, now before the House for consideration, because there is an urgent necessity for some immediate action on Puget Sound. That was as I understood the situation when discussed before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I am a member. We reported out the omnibus bill providing for twenty-seven fish hatcheries unanimously upon its merits. I had hoped it would receive consideration from the House and its approval in this session. But this bill seems to me, at least, Mr. Speaker, to be one that should receive attention now. The loss of capital during the last year has been over a million dollars. The number of men employed in 1905 was some ten or eleven thousand. Ten per cent less than that were employed in 1906, and unless something is speedily done to relieve the situation about the propagation of salmon, that is going to be a serious matter. I trust, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will receive favorable consideration of the House. I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to heartily favoring action on the omnibus bill, which should pass this House in this session, because the total amount carried in the bill is only in the neighborhood of half a million dollars.

I am still hopeful that the omnibus bill may receive consideration at the hands of the House and when it does that it shall be acted upon favorably.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Are not the other projects meritorious?

Mr. GOULDEN. They are all meritorious or they would not have been reported; but not to the same extent or degree as this one. This provides for immediate attention in order to save the salmon fisheries of Puget Sound for the benefit of the whole country.

Mr. PADGETT. Is there not a scarcity of fish in other localities that should be provided for?

Mr. GOULDEN. I take it that the fisheries in other localities are of importance, and I may add that the State of New York has a bill pending to provide for a hatchery in that State. I am not unmindful of my duty as a Representative from that State, but I believe that in other localities it is not nearly as necessary or important as that on Puget Sound. No one should stand in the way of any of these bills, all deserving favorable consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported an omnibus bill, distributing fish hatcheries through the different States, upward of twenty States being provided for in that bill. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has stated, I, too, have a bill for a fish hatchery, in the State of Michigan, in that omnibus bill, but there is no other provision in that omnibus bill for a hatchery for the propagation of salmon, except this one now asked for by the gentleman from the State of Washington. I know a little something about the catching of salmon on the Pacific coast, and there is no other place on that coast where exactly the same kind of salmon are caught as in Puget Sound. The salmon in the Pacific Ocean live in a certain territory and enter certain inland waters, and no other kind is caught anywhere that is exactly like the salmon of Puget Sound. For that reason I am perfectly willing to pass all other fish-hatchery bills and give to the State of Washington something that is so much needed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I want just a moment to explain to the House the condition that exists by comparing the statistics of the last two years, and then I will ask a vote upon the proposition.

The value of the salmon output in the State of Washington during the last year has decreased over $3,000,000. The number of men employed in 1906 was more than 1,000 less than in 1905, and the amount of capital invested was $1,000,000 less in 1906 than in 1905, according to a telegram that I received a few days ago from the fish commissioner of our State. Many of the best species of salmon are already practically extinct, and the price of salmon has increased throughout the whole country. This is a matter that affects not only Puget Sound, but everybody in the United States who buys a can of salmon. The price of salmon has increased throughout the whole country on account of the decrease of the salmon in Puget Sound. The value of the output last year, while over $7,000,000, was a decrease of $3,000,000 from the year before. I do hope that this House will not, for the paltry sum of $50,000, cripple this great industry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to suggest that the State itself is maintaining from 12 to 16 hatcheries and paying out from $65,000 to $100,000 every year for their maintenance and operation.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. We are doing the best we can in our State, but in spite of that fact the salmon are rapidly decreasing and this should be done for their preservation. I was in favor of the omnibus bill. I worked as hard for it as any man upon the committee. I do hope that no Member of this House will be moved by the motive that simply because he can not get what he wants himself he will refuse to give his support to a meritorious proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will pardon the interruption, that is not the motive. The motive is that if the House can not give the opportunity to consider all measures of similar character and of equal merit, then one should not be singled out. The objection is not made for the benefit of the individual Member, but in the interest of the House itself and in the interest of fair consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I admit all that the gentleman has said, but I do not believe that they are all of such pressing importance. This project has been strongly urged by the Fish Commissioner. He has said that this is the most meritorious proposition of this character in the United States, and that unless something is done the industry will be destroyed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be true, but the gentleman will admit that each Member who has another bill will say that his bill is the most meritorious.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. To some extent; but there is no other locality where the very existence of a great industry is jeopardized to the extent that it is here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before a vote is taken I ask that the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to send to the House a duplicate of the engrossed copy of Senate bill No. 1462.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send the proposed order to the Clerk's desk. The Chair will state that search has been made in the files of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the bill is misplaced or lost.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The bill is lost for all present purposes. The Clerk will report the proposed order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to send to the House a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 1462) to establish one or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound, State of Washington, the original having been lost.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is it in order on the motion to suspend the rules to consider a Senate bill without the engrossed copy of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Certainly not. In other words, it is in order to make the motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill, and the motion which has been made is in order. Debate has been in order, but at the close of the debate, after the bill has been searched for on the files of the committee, and does not materialize, the vote can not be taken; the House can not act upon a bill of which it does not have manual possession.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, that being the case, the point of order would lie against the further consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill can not be voted upon. It will have to be laid aside until the duplicate engrossed copy is obtained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I mean. A point of order will lie against the further consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The vote will have to await the materialization of the bill. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the order to request the Senate for a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill will say "aye;" opposed "no."

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. CLARK of Missouri demanded a division.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the question may be again stated, so that the House may understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the order.

The order was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CLARK of Missouri) there were—ayes 153, noes 50.

So the order was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of the afternoon session to-day the House take a recess until 8 o'clock for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under the order already made.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Does that mean all private bills except the bills from the Committee on Claims, War Claims, and the two Committees on Pensions?

Mr. DALZELL. All bills except from the Committee on War Claims, the Committee on Claims, the two Pension Committees, and bills conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I object.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to suspend the rules and adopt an order that when the House adjourns to-day at 6 o'clock it take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under the order already made.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, can the order be read?

The SPEAKER. For the information of the House the Clerk will read the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That hereafter during this session a motion to consider in the House, as in the Committee of the Whole House bills on the Private Calendar of the classes hereinafter described shall have the same privilege as is given by the rules on Fridays to motions to go into Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

All bills not objected to after five minutes' explanation thereof, reported from committees other than the Committees on Pensions, Invalid Pensions, Claims, and War Claims, excepting bills proposing to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. JAMES. I demand a second.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JAMES. Now I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if this motion is agreed to, will it be in order to consider any other business except these matters mentioned?

Mr. DALZELL. It will not.

Mr. JAMES. I have no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the rule is a little misleading. The last clause, where it excepts bills proposing to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims——

Mr. DALZELL. That excludes all bills that propose to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the word "and" ought to be put in there.

Mr. BONYNGE. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the order reads that bills will be in order for consideration except bills coming from the four committees, except bills conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

Mr. DALZELL. It doesn't say that.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes, it does; and under that order bills from the Committee on War Claims conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims will be in order.

Mr. DALZELL. It will not make any difference; they are all subject to objection. No bill can be considered against objection.

Mr. MANN. Under the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania the other day that the order provided an exception to all bills proposing to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims, I shall object to them anyway, for it was not intended to cover those claims.

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all; perhaps the word "and" ought to be put in there.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Whether or not a bill on the Private Calendar before a committee would be in order under a motion to suspend the rule?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly not.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask if it is not true if we do not pass this order that there probably will be no chance at the present session of considering these bills on the Private Calendar?

Mr. DALZELL. That is true; unless we have it to-night, there will be no opportunity to consider them.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think the order is exactly right as it stands. It says all bills not objected to after five minutes' explanation thereof reported from committees other than the Committees on Pensions, Invalid Pensions, Claims, and War Claims, excepting bills proposing to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims, shall be in order. That means reported by those five committees, and bills giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims are not in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the gentleman say that a bill conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims could be considered under that order?

Mr. PAYNE. It could not be considered, most assuredly.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the word "and" ought to be in there.

Mr. PAYNE. Not at all; it is not necessary.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not mean it without it.

Mr. PAYNE. It is correct as it is, and means just what it has been interpreted to mean heretofore.

Mr. DALZELL. I think so; but this is not a practical question, because the bills are all subject to objection.

Mr. MAHON. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. What is the use of bringing men here when the bills will all be objected to?

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I can not tell that. A great many gentlemen who are interested in these bills have been clamoring for some sort of an order.

Mr. MAHON. Well, they better go home and get their good dinners.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that at the last session of Congress, and at the last Congress, we disposed of, under a similar order, a great many very meritorious bills.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; and destroyed a great many meritorious ones. That precedent is not worth considering.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman state now that he intends now to object to any?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; to every one.

Mr. GARRETT. Then let us not adopt this order, and all may go home and get their good dinners.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the order.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the order was agreed to.

STREET RAILWAY THROUGH MILITARY RESERVATION, ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8128) granting to the St. John's Light and Power Company a right of way for street railroad purposes through the United States military reservation of Fort Marion, in St. Augustine, Fla., and through other Government property in said city, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the St. Johns Light and Power Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Florida, and its successors and assigns, authority to construct, maintain, and operate a street railroad, to be operated by electricity or other motive power, over and through the United States Military Reservation of Fort Marion, and over and through such part of Orange street known as "The Lines," the title of which may be in the Government, in the county of St. Johns and city of St. Augustine, on such lines and location as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That said right of way hereby granted to the St. Johns Light and Power Company shall be subject to termination by the Secretary of War upon sixty days' previous notice; and if said company shall fail or refuse to remove its tracks, poles, wires, and other structures and appurtenances from the reservation within said period of sixty days after notification so to do, then and in that event the Secretary of War may cause the same to be removed at the expense of the said company and without liability to damages therefor.

SEC. 3. That said company shall pay such reasonable annual rental for such right of way and at such time as may be fixed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. That no structure other than said railroad and the necessary poles and wires for the operation of the same shall be placed upon said right of way hereby granted without first being approved by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. We passed a bill the other day about a street-car line franchise through one of the military reservations down there. Is this relating to the same matter?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think we passed one in relation to a right of way. This simply grants the right of way across one corner of the old reservation down there.

Mr. MANN. In St. Augustine?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; and it is completely hedged about. It is absolutely in the control of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. It does not take the place of the bill that was passed the other day?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

J. A. T. HULL,
A. B. CAPRON,
JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House adopt the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House agree to the conference report.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. I see from the reading of the statement that the House recedes from the Senate amendment which provides for a school at the Military Academy.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman to state what that is.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the House insisted upon a disagreement to the provision and it all went out, and in lieu thereof was inserted a provision that the Members of the House and Senate on the board of visitors were authorized to make a special investigation of this question and report to the next Congress without binding in any way the action of Congress and without entailing a dollar of expense. I will say to the House that the Senate added about $33,000 to the bill and the conferees made a reduction, reducing it to $17,680.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman this, if the permitting of this investigation does not open the door to the establishment of this school?

Mr. HULL. Not unless Congress adopts it. I do not know how they will report. They may report against it. If they report for it it does not affect the judgment of Members of Congress as to future action except as the report may be strong enough to change the views of Members.

Mr. SULZER. Is there any expense attached to this?

Mr. HULL. Not at all. They are to be appointed on the board of visitors as now provided by law——

Mr. SULZER. I have no objection to it.

Mr. HULL. Excluding from it those not Members of Congress. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DEPOSIT OF UNEARNED FEES, ETC., WITH TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 11040.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11040) to authorize the receivers of public moneys for land districts to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States certain sums embraced in their accounts of unearned fees and unofficial moneys.

Mr. LACEY. I ask that the statement be read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 11040, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the whole of the Senate amendments and as a substitute therefor add at the end of section 4 of the bill the following: "Provided, That no homestead entryman shall be required to make payment of the purchase money on any application to make a cash entry until the same shall have been approved by the register and receiver, but such payment shall be made within ten days after notice of such approval."

And the House agree to the same.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. C. HANSBROUGH,
KNUTE NELSON,
A. J. MCLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House make the following statement:

As agreed upon by the conferees, the only effect of the amendment to the House bill is to relieve homestead commuters from payment of the commutation money until their applications to make cash entry shall have been approved by the registers and receivers of the local land offices, and that notice of such approval shall be given and payment made within ten days after such notice.

JOHN F. LACEY,
A. J. GRONNA,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING SECRETARY OF THE NAVY TO FURNISH METAL FOR A BELL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague [Mr. LAMB] on a conference committee, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 236) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish metal for a bell.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized to deliver to the Pocahontas Bell Association, if the same can be done without detriment to the public service, such condemned historic metal as he may deem proper, not to exceed 2,000 pounds in weight, to be used in casting a bell to be placed on the Virginia building at the Jamestown Exposition.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That the Government shall be at no expense in connection with this gift.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL PARK ON WHITE STONE HILLS BATTLEFIELD.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I am asked by my colleague [Mr. MARSHALL] to call up the bill (H. R. 25365) providing for the sale of certain lands of the While Stone Hills battlefield for the purpose of raising funds for improving and beautifying such park.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25365) to permit the State of North Dakota to sell a portion of certain lands heretofore granted to it as a memorial park on the White Stone Hills battlefield, for the purpose of raising funds for improving and beautifying such park.

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of North Dakota is hereby authorized and empowered to sell such portion as it may deem wise of the southeast quarter of section 7 and the southwest quarter of section 8 and the northeast quarter of section 18 and the northwest quarter of section 17, all in township 131 north, range 65 west, heretofore granted to said State to be used for the purpose of a memorial park and burial ground of the soldiers killed at the battle of White Stone Hills. The money derived from the sale of said land to be used by the said State only for the purpose of erecting monuments, improving and beautifying such portions of such grounds as it may desire to use as a memorial park.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how much of this land will be taken away from the park if this bill becomes a law?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this park contains 640 acres, which land was granted to the State in the year 1904. The State has asked to be permitted to sell a portion of this park for the purpose of erecting monuments.

Mr. SULZER. How much of the land does the State want to sell of the land now in the park?

Mr. GRONNA. Well, I do not know, but it is a part of the 640 acres. I do not know how much they want to sell.

Mr. SULZER. This is a very small park, and if you take away the four quarter sections, as the bill reads, it would leave a very small space of ground.

Mr. GRONNA. The gentleman is mistaken. The bill simply provides for the sale of such portions as they may think is advisable.

Mr. SULZER. Why would it not be better to pass a bill appropriating money to put up the monument instead of taking the land?

Mr. GRONNA. I would say to the gentleman there is no timber there. It is simply a noted battle ground where the battle was fought between the Second Nebraska Cavalry and some Sioux Indians, and there are twenty-two enlisted men buried there and one lieutenant.

Mr. SULZER. Another thing: I understand from what the gentleman has said that Congress gave this land to the State of North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. If the State of Dakota now owns the land, it seems to me that the State has the right, through an act of its legislature, to dispose of the land.

Mr. GRONNA. No; they have not, because there is a limitation on it.

Mr. SULZER. On the original act?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. The point I am trying to make is this: Being a very small park, it seems to me it would be bad policy on the part of the State to sell any land to the park in order to put up the monuments. The State ought to pay the money for providing the monuments and keep the land for a park.

Mr. GRONNA. It is the desire of these people to be permitted to sell a portion of it and keep the remainder for this cemetery.

Mr. MANN. Ought not that to have been presented to Congress at the time the act was passed if it is too large? In other words, if I may ask the gentleman, does he think it ought to be the policy of Congress to grant the park a tract of land on the plea that it is to be made into a park in memory of the battle, and then, having obtained too much land, come in with an act of Congress to sell land in order to erect a monument on it? We would have the same proposition from every place in the country where there is public land.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it is the desire of the people of this section and also of the State to have this done.

Mr. MANN. I think that had better go over until we find out what the effect will be everywhere else. Of course nobody would object to it in this particular place.

Mr. GRONNA. This is a very small matter, and I trust the gentleman will not object to it.

Mr. MANN. It is a very small matter at this place, and therefore the gentleman ought to waive any request. It is a very large matter as applied to the United States as a precedent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RELIEF OF HOMESTEAD AND OTHER ENTRYMEN.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 22588.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22588) for the relief of homestead and other entrymen who have been required to pay more than the legal fees, commissions, excesses, and purchase money.

Also an amendment in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"That in all cases in which homestead entrymen upon final proof of commutation shall have been required to pay more than the lawful purchase money for their lands, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the excess to be repaid to the entryman or to his heirs or assigns."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of homestead entrymen who have paid more than the lawful purchase money."

SITUATION OF NATURALIZED CITIZENS GOING ABROAD.

The SPEAKER. At the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], the Chair lays before the House the following House bill, with Senate amendments:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24122) in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State shall be authorized to issue passports to persons not citizens of the United States as follows: Where any person has made a declaration of intention to become such a citizen as provided by law and has resided in the United States for three years a passport may be issued to him entitling him to the protection of the Government in any foreign country: Provided, That such passport shall not be valid for more than six months and shall not be renewed, and that such passport shall not entitle the holder to the protection of this Government in the country of which he was a citizen prior to making such declaration of intention.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of State may issue, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, certificates of nativity to native-born American residents, setting forth the place and date of birth and place of permanent residence in the United States.

SEC. 3. That any American citizen shall be deemed to have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state.

When any naturalized citizen shall have resided for five years continuously in a foreign state it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen: Provided, however, That such presumption may be overcome on the presentation of satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Department of State may prescribe: And provided also, That no American citizen shall be allowed to expatriate himself when this country is at war.

SEC. 4. That any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband. At the termination of the marital relation she may resume her American citizenship, if abroad, by registering as an American citizen within one year with a consul of the United States, or by returning to reside in the United States, or, if, residing in the United States at the termination of the marital relation, by continuing to reside therein.

SEC. 5. That any foreign woman who acquires American citizenship by marriage to an American shall be assumed to retain the same after the termination of the marital relation if she continue to reside in the United States, unless she makes formal renunciation thereof before a court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens, or if she resides abroad she may retain her citizenship by registering as such before a United States consul within one year after the termination of such marital relation.

SEC. 6. That a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship by the parent: Provided, That such naturalization or resumption takes place during the minority of such child: And provided further, That the citizenship of such minor child shall begin at the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States.

SEC. 7. That all children born outside the limits of the United States who are citizens thereof in accordance with the provisions of section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and who continue to reside outside the United States shall, in order to receive the protection of this Government, be required upon reaching the age of 18 years to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States, and shall be further required to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority.

SEC. 8. That duplicates of any evidence, registration, or other acts required by this act shall be filed with the Department of State for record.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out all of section 2.
Change section 3 to section 2.
Page 2, line 10, after "resided," insert "for two years in the foreign state from which he came, or."
Page 2, line 11, strike out "(continuously)."
Page 2, line 11, strike out "(a)" and insert "any other."
Page 2, line 12, after "citizen," insert "and the place of his general abode shall be deemed his place of residence during said years."
Change section 4 to section 3.
Change section 5 to section 4.
Change section 6 to section 5.
Change section 7 to section 6.
Change section 8 to section 7.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Will the Senate amendments restore the bill practically to the condition in which it was before the House amended it?

Mr. PERKINS. They do not at all. The amendments, I will say, introduced by the Senate for the most part are formal—none of them at all objectionable.

Mr. MANN. You can move to concur. You do not need unanimous consent.

Mr. PERKINS. Under the order made I can not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to move to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill which has been read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, what is the nature of the bill and the amendments?

Mr. PERKINS. This bill was passed, as the gentleman may remember, with very little opposition in the House, defining the situation of naturalized citizens who go abroad. The amendments made by the Senate are for the most part formal. Discretion was given to the Secretary of State to issue a limited passport to persons who have lived here for three years and had not become full citizens. They add to that phrase "in his discretion." The second section authorizes the Secretary of State to give to American citizens certificates as to their nativity. It, however, was stricken out in the Senate. It was a very unimportant provision, on which we are not at all contentious. The only other change is section 3, which provided that in the case of naturalized citizens residing abroad for five years the presumption should arise that they had elected to leave this country. It is now stated in the provisions of almost all of our treaties that that assumption shall arise where a person resides three years in any country other than the one from whence he came, but only two years in the country from whence he came.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Were the conferees unanimous?

Mr. PERKINS. The conferees were unanimous.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the Senate amendments were agreed to.

EXTENSION OF LEASES IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 8063.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire first to ask unanimous consent?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I will first ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 8063) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved August 3, 1894, entitled 'An act concerning leases in the Yellowstone National Park,'" approved June 4, 1906.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend an act approved August 3, 1894, entitled 'An act concerning leases in the Yellowstone National Park,'" approved June 4, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized and empowered to lease, according to the other terms of said amended act, for a period not exceeding twenty years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, first, whether this bill now reported has the approval of the superintendent of the Yellowstone Park and also that of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I would say to the gentleman that the Secretary of the Interior favorably recommended this same bill with a provision for twenty years last year.

Mr. MANN. In the report on this bill there is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior and the superintendent of Yellowstone Park.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. A year ago it was favorably recommended for twenty years. At that time the Senate passed it that way, but the House committee cut it down to ten years. This bill merely restores the term of lease to twenty years, which is the time that the Secretary of the Interior and the superintendent of the park one year ago recommended.

Mr. MANN. The bill of a year ago passed and became law.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. It did.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman wishes to change the period from ten years to twenty years? Reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman to explain the necessity for that.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. In the lease given to the company that owned the Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel they are instructed to remove the hotel and build a new one——

Mr. MANN. Is this limited to the hotel site?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Purely to the sites of the hotels.

Mr. MANN. I do not care for further explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CASSEL. I also submit the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CASSEL. Also the following.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CASSEL. Also the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

With the following amendment:

In line 5, after the word "same," strike out "clerk herein authorized."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, how many clerks does that give to that committee?

Mr. CASSEL. No additional clerks. It only continues the clerk during the recess who is now employed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has nothing to do during the recess, has he?

Mr. CASSEL. He has work to do during the recess, and it was because of the necessity of retaining a man who is experienced in this business that we propose to pass this resolution.

Mr. MANN. Does that committee now have an annual clerk?

Mr. CASSEL. It does not. This makes an annual clerk, that is all.

Mr. GARRETT. What work does the Committee on Enrolled Bills have during the recess?

Mr. CASSEL. There is a good deal of clerical work connected with the files of the committee, indexing, and so forth.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

J. C. STEWART.

Mr. CASSEL. Also the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

With the following amendment:

In line 5, strike out the words "first session of the."

Mr. MANN. I should like to know what this is.

Mr. CASSEL. It is to pay the man who has charge of the weather maps and chronometer out in the hall here $100 for the two years' service.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of House resolution 775:

"Resolved, That the janitor whose employment was authorized by the House resolution adopted January 25, 1906, to care for the rooms for the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department and the lieutenants' and guard rooms of the Capitol police is hereby continued at the same rate of compensation, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for by law; and in addition to the said rooms he shall also care for the room of the index clerks, and shall at all times be subject to the conditions governing the employment of janitors to committees."

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT IN DISBURSING OFFICE.

Mr. CASSEL. Also the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1907, payable in equal monthly installments, a sum equal to $200 per annum as additional compensation as assistant in the disbursing office of the House of Representatives, until his salary at the rate of $1,600 per annum shall be otherwise provided for by law.

With the following amendment:

In line 5 strike out "as" and insert "to the."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ASSISTANT IN CLERK'S OFFICE.

Mr. CASSEL. Also the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1907, payable in equal monthly installments, the sum equal to the rate of $200 per annum as additional compensation to the assistant in Clerk's office of the House, until his salary at the increased rate herein authorized shall otherwise be provided by law.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following to come in at the end of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution the words "Provided, That the salaries of the twenty-five messengers now on the Doorkeeper's roll at $1,100 a year shall be $1,200 a year."

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that that is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. It is not germane.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee has submitted a number of resolutions increasing the pay of the employees of the House whose salaries are provided for in the legislative bill. I would like to ask the gentleman if these employees have had their salaries increased during the present session?

Mr. CASSEL. No; we have only tried to equalize these few cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hardly believed it possible that after what happened at the last session of Congress any meritorious employee had been overlooked in the legislative bill.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHARLES H. MANN.

Mr. CASSEL. I also call up the House resolution No. 678.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1907, payable in equal monthly installments, a sum equal to the rate of $300 per annum as additional compensation to Charles H. Mann, superintendent of press gallery, until his salary, at the rate of $1,500 per annum, shall be otherwise provided for by law.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

In line 4 strike out the word "three" and insert "two;" and in line 7 strike out the word "five" and insert "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CHIEF PAGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I also call up the resolution in lieu of House resolution 539.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolution in lieu of House resolution 539.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the two chief pages of the House amounts equal to the rate of $300 per annum each until their compensation, respectively, at the rate of $1,200 per annum shall be otherwise provided for by law.

The resolution was agreed to.

JANITOR HOUSE DOCUMENT ROOM.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I also call up a House resolution in lieu of House resolution 638.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution in lieu of House resolution 638.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the janitor employed in the House document room a sum equal to the rate of $120 per annum until the salary of said position is otherwise provided for by law at the rate of $840 per annum.

The resolution was agreed to.

J. M. THOMPSON AND J. J. CONSTANTINE.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I also call up House resolution No. 755.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1907, payable in equal monthly installments, a sum equal to the rate of $300 each per annum, as additional compensation to J. M. Thompson, as telegraph operator of the House, and to J. J. Constantine, as assistant telegraph operator, until their compensation, respectively, at the rate of $1,500 per annum, shall be otherwise provided by law.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "three" and insert "two;" and in line 8 strike out the word "five" and insert "four."

The resolution was agreed to.

OMNIBUS RESOLUTION.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I also call up the House resolution in lieu of several other House resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to which was referred House resolutions Nos. 547, 760, 761, 780, 782, 789, 849, 854, 871, 873, and 879, have had the same under consideration and recommend the adoption of the following resolution in lieu thereof, viz:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the following-named employees of the House the several amounts hereinafter set forth as additional compensation, viz:

To H. L. Overstreet, assistant chief clerk, $500.
To John J. Cameron, assistant official reporter, $200.
To J. G. Rodgers, assistant file clerk, $200.
To Willis H. Wing, first assistant enrolling clerk, $200.
To D. C. Dinger, index clerk, $300.
To Harry West, janitor to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, $280.
To H. P. Andrews, assistant to the bill and printing clerk by detail, $250.
To William H. Topping, clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, $500.
To W. L. Stiles, chief janitor, $300.
To Edwin L. Williams, clerk to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, $500.
To John R. Williams, file clerk, $250.
To J. A. Gibson, assistant in the stationery room, $300.
To William L. Nash, messenger to the Speaker's table, $200.
To William Keith, page in the folding room, $220.
To C. S. Hoyt, disbursing clerk, $500.
To William Tyler Page, clerk to the Committee on Accounts, $500.
To Harry V. Roe, document clerk, $160.
To Grant Jarvis, bill and document clerk, $200.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CASSEL. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I don't know whether they have left anybody else out of these increases, but I notice two persons who have been left out who I think ought to have their salaries increased, and those are the two reading clerks of the House. Why does the gentleman increase the salary of everybody else in the House, many of whom do not work, and fail to increase the salaries of the men we have been making work very hard? [Applause.]

Mr. CASSEL. I will say that because, as far as I can recollect, there has been no resolution submitted to our committee for that purpose.

Mr. HAMILTON. Oh, I submitted a resolution to the committee.

Mr. MANN. That would show that the gentlemen who are reading clerks are not only efficient but modest, which is more than can be said of many of the rest of them.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to apologize for my mistake. I am mistaken. There was a resolution there, and it was considered. I am perfectly willing, however, to have the amendment made. I want to say this: That this committee has been in session constantly, trying its best to equalize certain conditions.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment to that effect?

Mr. CASSEL. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, then I move to amend the resolution by adding the names of the reading clerks and $400.

Mr. CASSEL. I will accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the resolution add:
"To E. L. Lampson, reading clerk, $400.
"To Dennis E. Alward, reading clerk, $400."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman a question. In this resolution there is a provision made for an increase in the compensation of the clerks to certain committees?

Mr. CASSEL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At present, if I am correctly informed, the compensation of the committee clerks is uniform.

Mr. CASSEL. This resolution does not increase the salaries of any of the clerks or of any persons. It gives them special compensation up to date. The matter of making an increase in their salaries will be considered at the next session of Congress, if that is to be considered at all. This is paying them extra money for the work which they have already rendered to the House, and it does not give them an annual increase of salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For instance, if the gentleman will pardon me, there is a provision for an increase in the salary of a clerk to the Committee on Accounts, $500.

Mr. CASSEL. Yes; he is paid $500.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that due to the industry of that particular clerk in bringing in these resolutions to increase the compensation of all other clerks?

Mr. CASSEL. No, sir; it is due to the fact that he devotes twelve months in a year to the duties of his office. It is one of the offices constantly open; it is never closed, and he is on duty twelve months out of the year. In proportion to the amount of pay that others get, this is not an unreasonable compensation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the present compensation?

Mr. CASSEL. Two thousand dollars—the same as all other clerks to committees.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Have they not increased some clerks to committees?

Mr. CASSEL. We have in other resolutions, but not in this.

Mr. HULL. Then there is no clerk to a committee in this resolution?

Mr. CASSEL. Oh, yes; special compensation to clerks to committees, yes; but there is no annual increase to the salary of any clerk to a committee.

Mr. HULL. I understand that; but there is special compensation in this resolution?

Mr. CASSEL. Yes.

Mr. HULL. Did the gentleman investigate the resolution for the increase of the compensation of the clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. CASSEL. I suppose we have. We have investigated them all.

Mr. HULL. I will say, in my judgment, that there is not a clerk of the House who does more continuous work than does he, or who has more matters to look after. I would like the privilege of offering an amendment inserting the same compensation that you have given to other clerks.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the resolutions and amendments to a final passage.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASSEL. For a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, there are two employees of this House engaged in work for this House—three—two of whom get less salary than any other employees of the House. They are the two men who are engaged as drivers upon the wagons that carry out the documents from the Doorkeeper's room. They get only $50 a month, and they drive the wagon, handle all the heavy mail and documents sent out, and attend to that work ten months in the year, in all kinds of weather, and they get less than any other employee on the roll of the House. I think their salaries ought to be increased also.

I also want to say, in my judgment, the amount given for increase of salary of Mr. Cameron, which was only $200, is not enough, comparing it with the increases we have given to salaries of others. We know his work, and we know his efficiency, and this resolution only provides for an increase to him of $200, and I think it ought to be at least $300; and I want to make those two amendments particularly to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I will accept the two amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to increase the amount to John J. Cameron, Assistant Official Reporter, from $200 to $300; and I wish to add to the resolution that the two drivers employed under the Doorkeeper in the folding room shall be increased $240 each.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, let me say that an amendment under this resolution can only be made in a lump sum, appropriated to them for past services.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is not for past services.

Mr. CASSEL. Then it would not be germane to this resolution. I am sorry to raise that question.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then make it $240 for past services.

Mr. CASSEL. I accept the amendment offered in that way. Now I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be reported, so the House will understand it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 5 so as to read: "John J. Cameron, Assistant Official Reporter, $300;" and add to the resolution "to two drivers employed under the Doorkeeper in the folding room, $240 each."

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not opposing this increase—if I did that would be the end of it—but I notice that heretofore they have mentioned names. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois and by the gentleman from Georgia named names. Ought the names to be mentioned here?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that identifies them.

Mr. BARTLETT. That identifies them.

Mr. KEIFER. We will give you the names.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution "to Charles E. Moss and W. H. Bell, employed under the Doorkeeper in the folding room, $240 each."

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the increase of salary apply to those gentlemen whose names are called or will it carry to the position itself?

The SPEAKER. It carries it to the men for work heretofore performed.

Mr. GARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, the amendment reported increasing the salary of the reading clerks, to which I am not opposed, mentioned names. Will that carry it to those gentlemen or carry it to the position?

The SPEAKER. To the gentlemen for work heretofore performed.

Mr. GARRETT. It is all for past services?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, as the Chair understood it.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SELECTION OF LANDS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 7994) authorizing the State of North Dakota to select other lands in lieu of lands erroneously entered in sections 16 and 36 within the limits of the abandoned Fort Rice and Fort Abraham Lincoln military reservations, in said State.

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of North Dakota be, and is hereby, authorized to select, in lieu of lands embraced in homestead entries made and erroneously allowed prior to the passage of this act for lands in sections 16 and 36, within the limits of the abandoned Fort Rice and Fort Abraham Lincoln military reservations, in said State, other unappropriated surveyed nonmineral public lands of equal area situated within the limits of said State, in the manner provided in the act approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. L., p. 796), entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated for other purposes:" Provided, That such selection of lands by said State shall be a waiver of its right to the lands embraced in said homestead entries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this simply to give the right to select lieu lands in place of regular numbered section lands which the State failed to get.

Mr. GRONNA. I will state to the gentleman it is to permit a few settlers to keep their land in a military reservation that belongs to the State, and the State wants them to keep it. They can not prove up under the present law, and the State will lose nothing. It will be permitted to take other lands in their place.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is an exchange of lands?

Mr. GRONNA. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And for the benefit of the State?

Mr. GRONNA. For the benefit of the State and these settlers.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LAND FOR NORTH DAKOTA STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6134) providing for the conveyance to the State of North Dakota of certain tracts of land for the use and benefit of the North Dakota State Historical Society.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that bill is on the Private Calendar, and I suggest——

Mr. GRONNA. This is a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The House, under the order heretofore made——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I will state that it is reported by the committee. It is a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Private Calendar, and it will come up to-night, if it is reached. That is the objection of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The Chair was not aware that it was on the Private Calendar.

SUBSIDY BILL.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the merchant marine bill.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] will occupy the first half hour.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIRDSALL] the balance of the time on this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIRDSALL] is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. BIRDSALL. Mr. Chairman, the debate on this measure has taken a wide range for several days, and it occurs to me that it would be advisable to take some soundings and get back, if we can, to the real question that is involved in this discussion. In February, 1906, the Senate passed what is known as the "Gallinger bill," a cargo-subsidy bill. This was the evolution or the result of an investigation made by a joint Commission of the two Houses appointed two years ago. That Commission consisted, upon the part of the House, of three members of the Merchant Marine Commission, of Republican tendencies—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR]; of the Democratic membership, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SPIGHT], and Mr. MCDERMOTT, from New Jersey. This committee, acting with a like committee on the part of the Senate, spent much time in investigating questions relating to our merchant marine. They visited the principal ports of the country upon the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Great Lakes. As a result of their investigations there was brought forth the bill that I have referred to, known as the "Gallinger bill," a bill which provided for granting subsidy to ships of all classes, whether sail or steam, at the rate of $5 per ton on ships engaged in foreign trade for the term of twelve months, $4 a ton for six months, and $2.50 per ton for the shorter period of three months. It granted a cargo subsidy to the vessels engaged in deep-sea fisheries along the coast of Maine and upon the Pacific coast.

Now, this bill, the result of long labor upon the part of this commission, was passed in the Senate on February 15, 1906, came to this House, and was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In that committee it met its death. It would be interesting, if I had time, to go over the struggle that was in progress for a year over that bill, but it is now ancient history. The bill, I may say, has been killed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. [Applause.]

There are in this world many "doubting Thomases," and I hear it whispered about here in the House and elsewhere that this bill is "the voice of Jacob, but the hand of Esau". [Applause]. It is voiced not only here, but in the public press, and I desire, Mr. Chairman, to have the Clerk read in my time the following brief editorial, which I clipped from the Philadelphia Inquirer of February 27.

The Clerk read as follows:

A STEP TOWARD SHIP SUBSIDIES.

The House at Washington has agreed to settle the question of ship subsidy at 3 o'clock on Friday afternoon. At that time the miserable little substitute for the Senate bill will be brought to a final vote.

It is a mere makeshift. The Senate bill was bad enough. It was all right as far as it went, but it did not go very far. The House has presumed to take liberties with it, and the result is a measure of trifling value when the whole vast subject of restoring the American flag of commerce to the ocean is taken into consideration.

But it is something. It commits Congress to the principle of building up foreign trade in American-built vessels through Congressional aid, and at least opens the way to something better.

Unquestionably it ought to be passed, but—what a bill! It is a cowardly contrivance.

Mr. BIRDSALL. Now, as I observed, there are "doubting Thomases" outside of the Chamber as well as in the Chamber, and the impression has gone abroad through the country, as I remarked, that while this is the "voice of Jacob, it is the hand of Esau."

Now, I think it is due to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] that I set against a statement of that character the statement made in the opening paragraph of the majority report upon this bill, as follows:

This measure is not a general ship subsidy. It does not give a dollar of subsidy or bounty to cargo vessels of the tramp type. It does not give a dollar of subsidy or bounty or mail subvention or anything else to any company for operating a fast passenger service to Europe.

I do this, Mr. Chairman, for this reason: I believe that the general principle of ship subsidy has met its defeat, and that it is now dead, possibly for years to come, at least. Its mangled remains are down in the archives of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. [Applause.] And the superscription, to which I presume is appended the signature of the chairman of that committee, is "Murdered in the house of its friends." No better assurance need be given the country that the vicious principle of ship subsidy is dead than that it has been abandoned by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who for years has been its chief prophet. And I want these facts to go to the country so that there may be no uneasiness upon the subject, and that we may all understand it is as dead as Cæsar, and that now what is brought in here has been obliterated by black lines, and not a man in the House "so poor as to do it reverence."

Now, having put this testimonial to the patriotic motives and actions of the gentleman from Ohio upon record, knowing that his innate modesty would prevent him from suggesting it, I do want to say that I have some regret at the expressions that the gentleman made toward his fellow-members of the committee at the time of the adoption of this rule. I am sorry that he is not present in the Chamber; but he will follow me, and will have an opportunity to set himself right if I misquote or misconstrue him. The gentleman impugns not only the motives, but the intelligence of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW], a member of the committee, impugned as well the intelligence of that membership of this House who represent what is called "the cornfields" of this country, and went further to threaten the gentleman from Nebraska and other gentlemen upon this committee who have disagreed in their views with him—and the President, if you please—upon this question, to a certain extent, with defeat in their districts. I would rather consider these as words spoken in haste, unworthy the distinguished gentleman from the State of Ohio. But the gentleman from Nebraska needs no defense at my hands. He is the peer in intellect and in character of any man upon the floor of the House. [Applause.] Why, Mr. Chairman, good men have come from the cornfields. Lincoln, Washington, Grimes, and Harlan, and a host of men have come from the cornfields, and the cornfields have furnished, as the gentleman from Michigan yesterday said, the sinews of war and the sinews of commerce of this great country. Why, sir, up to a brief period the entire balance of trade in favor of the United States was derived from exports of agricultural products from the cornfields of the West and the cotton fields of the South. Within the last fifteen years over $6,000,000,000 have been added to our national wealth by balances of trade in favor of the cornfields and the cotton fields of our country. Are gentlemen to be laughed at and to be ridiculed because they represent these great interests and, perchance, have the courage of their convictions to stand up against raids upon the National Treasury? Why, sir, great men have come from the cornfields. Look over the list, if you please, of the men who have risen in this country to power and fame. Where have they come from? From the great cities? From the heat of commercial conflict? No; on the contrary, from the field of labor and from the farm. There amidst the fragrance of clover blossoms and the perfume of a thousand flowers are laid the habits of simplicity, of industry, and of economy that marked the after life. [Applause.] Why, gentlemen, the present occupant of the White House is the only great man that was ever actually born in the city of New York. [Laughter and applause.]

As I remarked at the outset, this discussion has taken a wide range, and in it we have had appeals to passion, to our patriotism, to our prejudice. I yield to no man in my reverence for and devotion to the flag of our country; that flag that waved in triumph over Cornwallis's army at Yorktown; that established American citizenship at New Orleans; that waved in triumph from the heights of Chapultepec and over the halls of the Montezumas, and received beneath its sheltering fold our erring brothers at Appomattox; that flag that shone above the clouds at Lookout Mountain, that in our later day has given freedom to the Gem of the Antilles and is now spreading the light of the civilization of the western world in the far-off islands of the sea; that symbol of the power and the glory and the might of 80,000,000 of Americans. But, sir, I like patriotism that is void of greed [applause] and that does not measure its devotion by the liberality of grants from the National Treasury. [Loud applause.]

Now, then, I have flung my Pegasus so high that I am using all my time, and I shall have to get back to the earth and back to this bill. And what is it? I have assured you that it is not a ship-subsidy bill. It is in plain words an amendment of the postal act of 1891, and is an endeavor to provide for an extension of our mail lines in certain directions upon the sea. Now, let us consider the bill in that light; let us disabuse our minds of passion and prejudice and consider it, then, as a plain, simple, business proposition. This bill provides, upon the Pacific coast, for two new lines, one north of Cape Mendocino, and one south of Cape Mendocino. It provides for the establishment of the mail line on the northern route, as follows:

From a port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States north of Cape Mendocino to Japan, China, and the Philippines on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $350,000 a year or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $700,000 a year.

Substantially the same provisions are made for the line south of Cape Mendocino, which is required to touch at Hawaii.

Now, is there any necessity for this contract upon these Pacific lines? If so, is the amount which we propose to pay for it a reasonable amount? Nobody anticipates that the amounts for which the contract will be secured will be materially less than the maximum amount fixed by the bill. Is it a good business proposition to go into it? Let us consider the situation for a moment. The lines from Seattle to Japan and China are already firmly fixed and established. The ships owned by James J. Hill can not be competed with either by domestic or foreign ships. Their construction, their great capacity of 20,000 tons each, make it absolutely impossible for any other ship of ordinary size, speed, or construction to compete with them, because it is perfectly apparent that the same motive power which will move, for instance, forty-five cars in a railroad train can be operated at relatively the same expense as on a train which carries but ten or fifteen cars. Consequently the increased capacity of these great ships, while not necessitating a very much larger crew than the ordinary five or six thousand ton ship, enables them to stand in the front rank and makes other ships powerless to compete with them.

Now, I say—and I think the testimony before our Commission justifies the statement—that even these great ships could comply with the requirements of this bill in the matter of speed. What are those requirements? That the ship shall be able to steam four hours in ordinary weather at a speed of 16 knots an hour. The testimony of Mr. Cramp, one of the greatest shipbuilders of this country, the testimony of an expert from San Francisco, and of at least two or three others before our committee was that a ship capable of running 14 or 14½ knots an hour under ordinary conditions could upon its trial speed develop 16 or even 18 knots an hour. The reason is plain. Upon the speed trials the ship is given every advantage to develop its speed. Its machinery is carefully looked after. It is ballasted just right. Further than that, they go to work and pick over the coal by hand that is to be used in its furnaces, and, as explained by Mr. Cramp, a man stands at the furnace door, and the moment the door is opened the fireman throws in the coal.

Everything is worked to perfection, so that it is possible for a ship sailing ordinarily 14 or 14½ knots to develop a speed of from 16 to 18 knots an hour. So that I say it is perfectly competent and it is entirely likely that this contract with the requirements contemplated by this bill could be secured by these ships, and the consequent result would not be the addition of a single vessel to the Northern Line from Seattle. So as to the Pacific Mail Line. There is no question that several of the Pacific Mail ships are now 16-knot ships and would be entitled to receive a contract of this character. These ships are now carrying our mails at a compensation satisfactory to them. Why, then, should we increase the compensation by contracts of this character? I undertake to say that the mail facilities will not be materially advanced by reason of the establishment of these two lines. Let me call your attention, gentlemen, to the report of the superintendent of the division of foreign mails relating to our present mail facilities upon the Pacific Ocean. He says:

By means of steamers sailing three or four times a month from San Francisco and three or four times a month from Seattle or Tacoma, mails for Japan and China have been dispatched not less than seven times a month.

These mails have included articles for the Philippines, but mails for the Philippines have also been dispatched by Army transports, which sailed from San Francisco for Manila about every twenty days. Correspondence for Japan and China has also been forwarded to Vancouver, British Columbia, for dispatch per steamers leaving that port about every three weeks, when the delivery of the correspondence would be thereby expedited.

Mails for the Australasian colonies have been dispatched from San Francisco once every three weeks by means of the contract steamers of the Oceanic Steamship Company, the transit time from San Francisco to Sydney being twenty-one days, and mails being delivered en route at Pago Pago.

Advantage is also taken of the opportunities offered for the dispatch of correspondence for those colonies by means of the Canadian Line of steamers sailing from Vancouver, British Columbia, once every four weeks.

The Oceanic steamers and those from Vancouver, above referred to, call at Honolulu, and most of the steamers en route from San Francisco to Japan and China usually call at Honolulu. Including the service under domestic mail contracts between San Francisco and Honolulu, there were from seven to ten opportunities a month for communication by mail with Hawaii, and generally there are not less than eight.

Now, then, the establishment of this contract service upon these two lines of the Pacific coast would do what? If you say that in consideration of this contract they ought to carry all the mails, then you reduce the service upon these trans-Pacific mails to fortnightly or monthly service. If you say that notwithstanding these contracts mails will be dispatched—as they undoubtedly will be dispatched by the Post-Office Department by every available means, as they are now dispatching from New York City and from Philadelphia, notwithstanding the great lines, as they are now dispatched at every available opportunity—if you say that mails will be so dispatched by vessels whenever an opportunity is afforded, then you are simply adding that much; you are simply donating to the trans-Pacific lines the amount of the several contracts, or substantially so.

Now, what is the cost of this service for seven, eight, and sometimes ten times a month? According to the report of the superintendent of the Division of Foreign Mails, our mails are dispatched over the Pacific Ocean, and this total cost of the Department now is $447,248.67, and we propose to give, upon this line of the North Pacific, $700,000 for a fortnightly service. Gentlemen, this is a business proposition. Let us consider it from a business standpoint.

Can any gentleman suggest a good reason why we should reduce the mail service and pay more for the deficient service? No, Mr. Chairman; the lines on the Pacific Ocean are now firmly established; trade with the Orient is an established fact, and will continue to grow under existing conditions. I have no doubt, sir, that Cape Mendocino is the line of demarcation between the influence of J. J. Hill and the Great Northern and the Harriman lines; but this does not influence me in the settlement of this question. If they gave equally good service at as low a cost, it would be immaterial, in my mind. We are not here to aid or injure any particular interest, but to solve this question, if we can, in the light of reason and common sense; and, considering the question from a business standpoint, I am opposed to the extension of the two Pacific lines to the Orient from the Pacific.

Now, let us examine the facts with relation to the Oceanic Line from San Francisco to Australia. Upon this line the Oceanic Steamship Company is now under contract to carry the mail on a monthly service at $283,000 per annum. This contract with the Government runs until 1911, so there is yet four years unexpired. Now, without providing further service or creating any additional burden upon the steamship company, we propose to increase their pay under the contract by $200,000. It is claimed, and possibly it may be true, that the steamship company is losing money, but that is not a sufficient reason for us to put our hands into the money bag and make them a donation of $200,000 per year, which in the aggregate will add $800,000 to their compensation for the unexpired term of their contract. There is neither rhyme nor reason in such a proceeding. If the steamship company succumbs, then let us readvertise the contract and let it to the lowest bidder, thus proceed as we ought on business and not on charitable lines. Let us take a firm stand also on this line, and insist for once at least that this contract with the Government shall be faithfully adhered to and performed. At the proper time amendments will be offered to the bill striking out the provisions thereof relating to the two Pacific lines, and the paragraph relating to the Oceanic Line to Australia. I sincerely trust, sir, that the amendments will prevail.

If these lines be stricken from the bill, and it be so amended as to require all ships on the South American lines to be hereafter constructed, and be so further amended as to require the Postmaster-General to let the contract to the lowest bidder at the highest rate of speed, then I am authorized to say on behalf of the entire delegation from the great State of Iowa, which I have the honor in part to represent, that it will support the remainder of the bill. I am unalterably opposed to the principle of cargo or tonnage subsidy. First, because it is wrong in principle and contrary to my notions of the functions and purposes of government. Governments are instituted for the purpose of keeping the peace and compelling us to settle our grievances by arbitration rather than by arms; by arbitration not by blows; but it is not instituted to make any man richer or poorer, and the only purpose should be to protect all alike in the exercise of their individual powers and enterprises as comembers of a common society.

I am sorry to say that somehow in these late times we have come to look too much for Government aid, to expect the Government to make us richer or poorer, and the consequence of it is to fill our halls with the representatives of special interests, capital and labor alike demanding some legislation which will enhance a particular interest. This is all wrong, and I hope the day is not far distant when our lobbies will be cleared of them and the money changers scourged from the temple. I am opposed to the subsidy principle again because it is impracticable and would be wholly inefficient if extended now to rehabilitate our merchant marine. No, Mr. Chairman, in the first place, we are not a seafaring people and will never again become such until our necessities drive us into that occupation. We have a young and energetic civilization that is now and has been for fifty years engaged in developing and building up our internal resources. That little civilization which a hundred years ago was gnawing indentations on the western slope of the Alleghenies has spread throughout the Middle and great West, making farms, building cities, developing the mines and forests, the great systems of transportation, and the thousands of factories, and notwithstanding the fact, sir, that more than a million immigrants seek our shores annually, still the cry is for more men to labor in the fields, the mines, the forests, and the factories. By and through our beneficent system of protection we have builded up a standard of wages and standard of profit to capital unknown elsewhere in the world, and this very prosperity for our capital and labor forms an insuperable obstacle to the building up of our merchant marine.

Gentlemen speak of its profitable condition prior to 1850 and seek for the cause of its decline. In my judgment, it lies in the fact that since the civil war throughout every department of industry capital has been more profitably engaged, labor more universally employed at better wages than at any period in our history or in the history of any nation on the globe.

What inducement is there for the young men to become seamen? Wages upon the sea range from $18 to $30 per month, a pittance when compared with the wages prevalent throughout all the trades on land. Capital is employed profitably on land in manufacturing, in building, and in speculations. Why should it seek the peril of the sea? Under existing conditions the cost of ship construction in the United States is 25 to 30 per cent higher than upon the Clyde or at Amsterdam. The cost of operation and maintaining the ship is 30 to 35 per cent higher than of foreign ships. The rate of transportation is now confessedly so low that Americans under the conditions named can not engage profitably either in shipbuilding or in operation. Given a ship free of cost, the American owner can not operate it under our laws and employ American labor without a loss. He can not get the cargo at a rate which affords a profit. The simple proposition, therefore, of the ship-subsidy advocate is to make this business profitable by paying the margin of loss from the Treasury of the United States. I am opposed to it, and if I know the sentiment of the farmer and business men of my district and State it is in opposition to the proposition.

When the time arrives, if it ever should, when our elbows touch, when capital and labor alike are seeking employment at a low margin of profit, then we may turn again to sea, but until that time arrives we may expect foreigners to do our ocean transportation.

Within our own country, and within our legitimate sphere of action, we can protect American labor against foreign labor; but when our domain steps out to sea, and when the pilot leaves our ship in the harbor, it enters upon the broad ocean in competition with the world. If we enter upon the policy of subsidy, where will it end? We start at the outset with a handicap of 25 per cent in cost of construction and 30 per cent in cost of operation and maintenance against us. We can expect that foreign nations, for the protection of their interests, will likewise enter upon the policy of subsidy and meet any advantage granted or gained by our builders and operators from Government bounties. I have no fear of this Government entering upon the bounty system.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the substitute report here—the Gallinger bill—which passed the Senate, provides as follows:

That the act entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce," approved March 3, 1891, be, and hereby is, amended by adding thereto the following section:

"SEC. 10. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts for a term of ten years, with citizens of the United States, for the carrying of mails on steamships hereafter built in the United States and registered in the United States, or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof, a majority of the stock of which shall be and shall continue to be owned by citizens of the United States), between ports of the United States and ports on the routes and for the amounts hereinafter prescribed.

"First. From a port or ports of the Atlantic coast of the United States to Brazil, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year.

"Second. From a port or ports of the Atlantic coast of the United States to Argentina, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a monthly compensation not exceeding $400,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $800,000 a year: Provided, That a vessel receiving compensation for mail service pursuant to contract on a voyage on this route shall not also receive compensation for mail service pursuant to contract on said voyage on the first route as described above.

"Third. From a port or ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to the Isthmus of Panama, on steamships of the United States of not less than 14 knots speed, for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $75,000 a year, or for a weekly service at at a maximum compensation not exceeding $150,000 a year.

"Fourth. From a port or ports of the Pacific coast of the United States to the Isthmus of Panama, Peru, and Chile, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year.

"Fifth. From a port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii to Japan, China, and the Philippines on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $350,000 a year or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $700,000 a year.

"Sixth. From a port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States north of Cape Mendocino to Japan, China, and the Philippines on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $350,000 a year or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $700,000 a year.

"Seventh. From a port or ports of the Pacific coast of the United States, via Hawaii and the Samoan Islands, to Australasia, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a service once in three weeks at a maximum compensation not exceeding $200,000 a year, in addition to the compensation now provided pursuant to contract under this said act of March 3, 1891: Provided, That the requirements of this section as to the rates of speed shall be deemed to be complied with if said rates are developed during a trial of four hours' continuous steaming at sea in ordinary weather in water of sufficient depth to make the test a fair and just one and if the vessels are maintained in a condition to develop such speed at any time while at sea in ordinary weather. This trial shall be made under the direction and supervision of a board of naval officers which the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint upon the application of the owner or owners of the vessel to be tested: And provided further, That all the provisions of the first nine sections of this act are hereby made applicable in all respects to the services provided for in this section: Provided, however, That the specific rates of compensation described in section 5 of this act shall not apply to the services provided for in this section, and that all ordinary repair or overhauling of a steamship employed and paid for carrying mails under this section shall be made in the United States, except in cases where drydocking is necessary and no American dry dock of sufficient capacity shall be within a distance of 500 miles of the location of said ship when the repairs shall be needed."

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part whenever in its judgment the public interest shall so require, without, however, impairing in any wise the obligation of any specific contract then in force which shall have been entered into under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That there shall be enrolled, in such manner and under such requirements as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, from the officers and men now and hereafter employed in the merchant marine and fisheries of the United States, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Great Lakes, such officers, petty officers, and men as may be capable of rendering service as members of a naval reserve, for duty in time of war, and who are willing to undertake such service, to be classified in grades and ratings according to their capacity as shown at time of enrollment. No man shall be thus enrolled who is not a citizen of the United States by either birth or naturalization. These members of the Naval Reserve shall be enrolled for a period of four years, during which period they shall be subject to render service on call of the President in time of war. They shall also possess such qualifications, receive such instruction, and be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon proper audit by the Auditor of the Navy Department, to pay out of any money to be annually appropriated therefor upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates to such officer, petty officer, or man thus enrolled and employed in the merchant marine or fisheries, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Great Lakes, as hereinafter provided, an annual retainer as follows: For each officer of the line or Engineer Corps having the rank of lieutenant in the Naval Reserve, $110; for each officer of the line or Engineer Corps having the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Naval Reserve, $90; for each officer of the line or Engineer Corps having the rank of ensign in the Naval Reserve, $80; for each man with a rating of chief petty officer, $70; for each man with a rating of petty officer, first class, $60; for each man with a rating of petty officer, second class, $48; for each man with a rating of petty officer, third class, $40; for each seaman, first class, $36; for each seaman, second class, $30; for each seaman, third class, $24. Such retainer shall be paid at the end of each year of service on certificate, by the Secretary of the Navy, that the member of the Naval Reserve has complied with the regulations and has served for at least six months of the preceding twelve months on vessels of the United States in the merchant marine or fisheries. The total number of officers, petty officers, and men enrolled in the Naval Reserve shall not at any time exceed 10,000.

It is not a subsidy measure, but an amendment to the postal act of March 3, 1891, under which we have been extending our ocean mail service. The act of 1891 contains provisions requiring the construction of ships used in mail service upon plans and specifications made by the Secretary of the Navy, to the end that they may be easily converted into armored cruisers or transports in time of war, and also provides that the Government may purchase them, if the necessity therefore should arise, at their face value upon appraisement. It is no doubt true that our Navy and our commerce would be practically helpless without an auxiliary fleet of merchant vessels, and it is probable that this is the cheapest manner in which they can be obtained.

Mr. Chairman, I have said that if certain amendments were made to the bill eliminating the Pacific lines and leaving the South American lines alone in the bill and further amended by providing for the construction of entirely new ships, we would support the bill. The countries of Central and South America are properly within our legitimate sphere of influence. We have for nearly a hundred years accepted the Monroe doctrine, and we must maintain it for the security and peace of the Western Hemisphere. We should cultivate friendship and trade with our neighboring countries in South America, and the first essential requisite for that purpose is speedy means of communication.

My information from the Post-Office Department is that at the present time the average time of communication from New York and Rio Janeiro and Buenos Ayres is twenty-five days, and the fact is that most of our mail for those ports is sent by way of Europe. The American consul at Falkland Islands is a resident of my city, and is compelled to go abroad by way of Liverpool. Now, there is a great trade in South America and we should grasp it.

The following extracts from our trade and consular reports show the condition we are now in with reference to trade in that quarter of the world:

CONSUL GUENTHER'S TESTIMONY.

Germany has forty-three large steamships in her South American service, and six more are nearly ready for launching. The forty-nine vessels aggregate 217,195 gross tons. Most of them are of recent construction, nineteen having been built in the years 1900 to 1905. They ply on four routes, all starting from Hamburg, connecting the latter port with the La Plata States and Brazil. Germany's flourishing export trade to South America, it is believed, is mainly due to this direct and prompt transportation service. In a letter furnishing the foregoing information Consul Guenther, of Frankfort, Germany, says that an English journal, speaking on this service, quotes the following from an American merchant in Buenos Aires:

"We here have no parcels-post connection with the United States, lacking which my firm is obliged to order every year many thousand dollars' worth of goods from Europe which I would prefer to get from home. We even have no regular mail service with the United States. Reply letters from there take three months ere they reach us here, whereas letters from Europe consume only a fortnight in getting here. Steamers from the United States always contain petroleum in their cargo, and for that reason are not allowed to enter the inner harbor, but are obliged to discharge their freight on lighters, which causes delay and inconvenience. Goods arriving from Europe can be disposed of within five days while goods from New York require four weeks after their arrival here before we can dispose of them. That this condition handicaps trade with the United States needs no further demonstration."

OUR MINISTER TO CHILE.

Hon. John Hicks, our minister to Chile, emphasizes the need of an American ocean mail service on the west coast of South America in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports of December 11, 1905:

"One of the great difficulties in the way of a closer commercial connection between the United States and Chile is in the lack of good shipping facilities. The passenger and much of the freight traffic of the entire west coast of South America is in the hands of two companies, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, English, and the South American Steamship Company, a Chilean corporation. Both companies receive a subsidy from the Chilean Government and they alternate in the dispatch of ships between Panama and Valparaiso. Naturally they are in a combination or trust, and it seems difficult to bring about any change or improvement in their methods of doing business. When these steamers take from twenty-five to thirty days between Panama and Valparaiso it can readily be seen that American trade must suffer, for the trip could easily be made in ten days. So long as this condition exists and steamers can come from Europe almost as quickly it will be a difficult matter to increase American business on this coast."

OUR CONSUL AT MONTEVIDEO.

Consul O'Hara, at Montevideo, explains the relatively small trade between Uruguay and the United States as due primarily to lack of swift and regular steamship communication, and also to the fact that Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy have merchants of their own nationality in Uruguay representing their steamships and pushing their goods and doing their utmost to prevent the sale of American merchandise. The consul says, in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports of December 11, 1905:

"The same people who push our merchandise aside and force that of others to the front push our country aside and say that while we are a great producing nation we have no facilities for marketing our products. Here we are forced to silence. The records show that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, there were exported from this country to the United States goods to the value of $3,998,175 American gold, and that not one dollar's worth of this amount left this port on an American vessel.

"It is estimated that not 1 per cent of North Americans who travel abroad include South America in their itinerary, while not more than 20 per cent of Latin Americans traveling abroad seek the United States in their voyaging. Although more of them come to us, except in the case of Mexico, than we send to them, interchange of travel is so small as to have little beneficial effect. There are several reasons for this condition, among which is our lack of steamship facilities.

"On this point, indeed, too much can not be said, not only because it is very important, but because it can and should be immediately changed. The advantage is now entirely with Europe, and the disadvantage is wholly with the United States. This is not in any sense an argument for or against so-called 'ship subsidies,' but a plain, square statement of fact. At the present time there is not one first-class, fast, up-to-date express passenger or mail steamer running between any North American port and the ports of the great nations of South America. In contrast to this is to be noted the remarkable fact that Europe has nine different lines of large, commodious, modern, fast steamers giving frequent and excellent service between its chief ports and those of Latin America. Many of these boats will rival those of the northern trans-Atlantic lines in the luxury of their accommodations."

"It is true that there seems to be an abundance of freight steamers between the United States and South America, but no South American—and the number of those who travel is increasing annually—will take a freight, cattle, or small steamer for the United States when he has the selection of many lines of passenger, express, and fast steamers."

In his annual report for 1906, our Postmaster-General speaks in the following emphatic manner concerning our postal facilities with South America:

Foreign governments are steadily increasing the speed of their fast mail steamers and requiring them to have fixed and regular sailings. The mail steamers of other countries leaving ports of the United States, will more and more absorb our foreign mail transportation until such time as the United States provides an adequate compensation for the outward voyage of steamers of equal speed and regularity of sailings. Congress authorized the Postmaster-General by the act of 1891, to contract with owners of American steamships for ocean mail service, and has realized the impracticability to command suitable steamers in the interest of the postal service alone by requiring that such steamers shall be of a size, class, and equipment which will promote commerce and become available as auxiliary cruisers of the Navy in case of need. The compensation allowed to such steamers is found to be wholly inadequate to secure the proposals contemplated. This is especially true as to Australasia and several of the countries of South America with which we have cordial relations, and which, for manifest reasons, should have direct mail-communication connections with us. The unprecedented expansion of trade and foreign commerce justifies the prompt consideration of an adequate foreign mail service. Expenditures to this end seem fully warranted also from the standpoint of a proper naval establishment, inasmuch as the vessels performing service are so built as to be readily converted into auxiliary cruisers. Favorable legislation on this subject is urgently needed.

The President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor have likewise recommended the establishment of speedy lines of mail communication.

Our ocean mail service now has annually to its credit a profit of about $3,000,000. We can afford to expend a portion at least of this for the further extension of our mail facilities upon the ocean, and I believe, sir, that first of all we should commence with our neighbors on the south. If I believed that this bill were in any sense a cargo subsidy or entering wedge for bounties from the Treasury, I should oppose it in toto. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the debate that is about to terminate, as far as the general debate is concerned, has been a very interesting one, and I am now charged with the duty of completing it so far as the affirmative of this question is concerned.

Of course, it will be impossible for me to even refer to much of the argument and denunciation that have been made on the other side of this question, and I shall confine myself to a very few of the suggestions that have been made by the opponents of the bill, and answer, as far as I may be able, some of the objections.

I am very much surprised that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIRDSALL], in the closing hours of the debate, should seek to prejudice me in the estimation of the House of Representatives by making any allusion in a critical manner to what I said about cornfield statesmen. Everybody who has read the papers understood that a certain Senator called himself, with much self-approbation, a "cornfield statesman." I referred to him, and everybody understood it, and it was neither magnanimous nor fair in the gentleman to criticise me. I have hoed more corn, and continued to hoe corn longer, in my young days than any other Member in this House, in my opinion, and I certainly have never sneered at anybody because he hoed corn. [Applause.] I do not believe interstate commerce could prevent the shipment of the corn, although I hoed it when I was only 16 years of age.

Mr. SULZER. We will accept the gentleman's apology. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I may not have an opportunity to reply to the Bates bill argument put forth by the proxy of that gentleman on the floor, and therefore I will simply say that every proposition in it has been repudiated by men of all parties and all opinions upon this great question years ago.

We passed in this House since I have been a Member of it a very strong ship-subsidy bill. It was the real thing. It had been passed in the Senate; it came over to the House; it was fully debated; amendments were offered to it, and some of the amendments agreed to, and then the bill was passed. Fortunately, under our system of legislation we have a way of putting down a record of how men vote, and it may be that between this and the close of the five-minute debate I may have occasion to call the attention of one or two gentlemen to their record, and it will amuse the people of the country greatly when they read it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes I have I want to take up some of the objections. In the first place, yesterday it was stated that it was impossible to get out of the record of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries answers to certain questions that had been propounded in regard to the cost of running a ship, and various items in detail of everything connected with the ship. Eight thousand copies of the hearings before the committee, as I stated yesterday, were published, and here are detailed statements of the cost in the various shipyards of the United States of the building of the ships; and here is, down to the pay of the cooks and the coal heavers, the expense of running these great ships, every item, thoroughly itemized and set out.

On pages 372–380 of the hearings before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, April 4 to 13, 1906, the Oceanic Steamship Company, of San Francisco, operating a mail service to Australasia under the law of 1891, submits detailed statements of the wages on its 6,000-ton 16-knot American steamers, as compared with British and Japanese steamers of the same class, and a summary of the entire cost of operation of the Oceanic Line, as follows:

NOTE.—The above monthly pay roll is 45.9 per cent less than the monthly pay roll of the Oceanic Steamship Company's steamer Sonoma.

Up to May 1, 1905, the mail subsidy paid by the British Government to the Orient Line was $425,000 per annum. After that date a new contract was made giving $600,000 per annum, the concessions made by the contractor being the employment of white crews only and a small increase in speed. The change from mixed crews to all white men will result in an estimated annual cost to the company of about $120,000.

So much for that proposition. The most elaborate pains were taken to give to the country and to the House of Representatives the fullest possible information. But it was stated—and I now desire to go into that a little more in detail—that the operation of one of these great ships was a certain figure, which does not appear in the RECORD this morning, but I hope it will appear exactly as it was read yesterday, and then I will put into the RECORD the cost of running one of the North Atlantic 16-knot steamers on the proposed route from New York to Brazil; and the cost of the vessel is not $600,000. No man can build a ship that can carry this contract for $600,000 nor for less than twice that money. Why is it necessary to bring in padded figures to bewilder the listeners? I will read to you the statement and then I will read to you who makes the statement. It was handed to me by Admiral Bowles this morning. The cost of the vessel is $1,200,000, and you can not build one of these ships that can carry this mail under this contract for less money than that. For the wages of officers and crew of 118 men, subsistence of crew, repairs, depreciation 5 per cent, insurance, interest on investment, miscellaneous stores, and shore expenses, $384,815. So that you have built your ship at an expense of $1,200,000, and at the end of the year you have added $384,815 more to the outlay of the owner of the ship.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What is the tonnage of these ships?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The tonnage must be not less than twelve to sixteen thousand tons.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is there anything in the bill that prescribes that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is the old law. They are to be built under the existing law. Think of that. Here we are just ready to vote, and I am asked a question how these ships are to be built! The bill itself is the law of the land and has been ever since 1891.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I just asked you about the tonnage of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It describes the size of the ship, it describes it must be built under the supervision of the Navy, it must be in condition to be turned into a war vessel, it must be built to carry four big guns—just such ships as the 20-knot ships now in the American Line. Two of those were built with a view to this identical statute, under which every one of these ships must be built. Now, then, this is a very curious way of computing. Here is a contract that will take, at least calculation, four ships, to be always fitted up and to be always ready to go, and when the gentleman wants to figure on it he takes the cost of one ship and the expense of running that ship one year, and then he puts down the subsidy for the mail contract and subtracts the cost of the ship and the cost of running it a year and says that the subsidy is too great, forgetting that he is figuring on one ship, while it will take not less than three and probably four to carry the contract.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very much interested in what the gentleman said in reference to the old law. As I understood the gentleman, he said it provided for a 12,000-ton ship.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I say they will be that, but you can not get the speed without increasing the size of the ship.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The highest provided in the law was 8,000 tons and 20 knots.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; but they could not carry the mail at 16 knots an hour.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Those 16-knots-an-hour ships were only to be of 5,000 tons.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The law is just where it stands, and my point is this: When you add to the speed of the ship, you have got to add to the construction of the ship, and we have no 16-knot ships except these four American liners between New York and Europe.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand the gentleman, and I do not want to misunderstand him. I understood from his answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] that the ship the estimated cost of which he was giving there would be of 12,000 tons.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did—6,000 tons. I made an entire mistake from my own paper. It is 6,000 tons to a 16-knot ship. It is in the speed of the ship where the trouble comes.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I have not time enough to yield. As four vessels of this type is the lowest number which will make the required schedule of twenty-six round trips per year in the Brazil service, allowing each vessel seven round trips, the annual cost of operation of the line will be $1,539,300. The proposed subvention of $600,000 is 38 per cent, or a very moderate proportion of the fixed charges. The conservative operation of such a line, to insure the regularity of schedule exacted under penalty by the law of 1891, would require at least one additional vessel, or five in all, for this Brazil line.

For the Argentine line larger steamers of greater cost would be required, and at least two more steamers would be necessary to maintain the same schedule—that is, they would have to have seven vessels in that line.

With due consideration to the additional distance of a thousand miles run on the outward voyage, the proposed subsidy of $800,000 for this line is a less proportion than the above. These estimates are vouched for by the New York Shipbuilding Company, the Boston Steamship Company, the Maryland Steel Company, the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, and the Newport News Shipbuilding Company. Then I will put into my remarks the estimate of the tons of coal to run a 16-knot steamer. Fuel consumed at an average speed of 15 knots, 120 tons per day. I have personally been on a ship where the fuel reports of the consumption of coal showed 240 tons of coal per day, and that is the lowest estimate to drive a ship 20 knots. I will put this in my remarks. Then I will put in prices of the cost of coal, and you will find that there has not been an estimate made on this floor—though it had been sanctioned by whom I care not—that did not misrepresent the facts by more than 50 per cent of the actual cost of construction and maintenance. Now then, it has been said that there is necessity for only one line to South America. I never traveled over that route, but I have been furnished with some calculations. It seems to be necessary to explain that ocean steamers of the first class do not run on wheels. The subsidy is not for the purpose of constructing a line of double track to Rio and extend it to Buenos Ayres, but it is for the purpose of the construction and operation of a group of steamers running from New York, first, with passengers and freight for the ports of Bahia, Pernambuco, and Rio, and returning from Rio loaded with freight for American ports. Second, a group of steamers running from New York to Argentina with passengers and freight to that section of South America and returning loaded with the freight and products of that country for ports in the United States. No one line can efficiently serve both purposes. These separate lines are intended to serve large areas of productive country, the centers of which are a thousand miles apart. Now, that answers the whole of this proposition.

In the great subsidy bill passed by the House of Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress, for which so many gentlemen who are now opposing this bill voted so earnestly and so often, there was no such limitation of speed put into that bill as we are putting into this one. Now, it is said—and I only refer to these things to show what an accumulation of misinformation we have had—you could take the Ward Line, which is an American line, and carry this mail to South America with the Ward Line ships, and that a Ward liner, the Morro Castle, and others are available for the new route to South America. It is both absurd and impossible, because the fastest of these ships mentioned are under contract with the Government under five and ten year contracts, under the law of 1891, to carry the United States mail to Cuba and Mexico.

One of their contracts runs to 1912. These ships were built for that trade and they are adapted to that trade and they are needed in that trade. They could not be diverted to South America without destroying the Cuban and Mexican commerce of the Ward Line and without violating formal contracts with the Government for which penalties are imposed. As to two of these ships named in the piece read yesterday, they are only 14-knot steamers, while 16-knot steamers are expressly required under the operation of this bill. As to the vessels mentioned as under construction in the Morse Company, now let us see what pabulum we have been fed on. It was said there were some ships being built by the Morse Company that could be well taken right up and put in the South American trade to carry these mails down to the stormy ocean, to the stormy gulf, and deliver our mails at 16 knots an hour. Here are the ships, from Long Island Sound and New England, coast passenger steamships, high sided, of shallow draft, and almost as unfit as Mississippi River steamboats for the long routes to South America. They were not even remotely intended for long voyages at sea, but were designed to leave port at night and get to their destination the next morning. Not one of them could steam out to Brazil without burning her cabin and upholstery for fuel. Eight hundred thousand dollars for a line to Argentina and $600,000 for a line to Brazil may seem very large, but the British Royal Mail to the West Indies, Brazil, and Argentina required for its establishment years ago with small, slow steamers, scarcely half the size of those proposed in this bill, a subsidy of $1,350,000 a year. The German line of steamers established a few years ago to the East Indies by way of the Suez Canal is composed of small and less expensive steamers than those proposed in this bill, and has a subsidy for fortnightly service of one million three hundred and thirty thousand a year, and for four years has earned no dividend whatever. The British and German ships cost less to construct and less to maintain than do American ships. The opinion expressed by practical shipowners since this bill was framed is that these subventions are sufficient, but no more than sufficient, to create fast lines of 16-knot steamers to South America. Both of the steamers on subsidized lines from Europe to South America are of less than 16 knots. The requirements of this bill on American shipowners, therefore, are very severe.

Now, it has been said on this floor—and I know the source from which it has come—that Germany does not subsidize the Hamburg-American Line. No more misleading statement than that can be made by any living man. Not only is the mail pay of the Hamburg-American Line greater than the pay of any other line running out of Germany, but the Hamburg-American line has a contract with the German Government by which the German Government reduces the railroad charges to the emigrant and it goes as a subsidy to the Hamburg-American Steamship Line, and out of that source of revenue comes one of the most opulent of their profits. And the Government of Germany would no more permit one pound of her freight or one head of her passengers to be carried upon any ship other than a German-made ship than she would commit any other breach of duty that she claims to owe to her citizens.

Now, then, here is a very simple matter. A gentleman the other day read, or had read from the Clerk's desk, a leading editorial article from a New York paper opposing American ships, as several of them do, and advocating practically the turning over of the business of the country to foreign ships. I hold in my hand a page of that paper. Gentlemen will see some green checks over the advertisements. That entire speech is covered with the advertisements of ocean mail steamship companies and two or three coast-line companies. There is on that page, as permanent matter, the advertisements of seventy-four foreign steamships. How many American do you think? Thirteen; and two-thirds of those are coastwise. Now, certainly I do not claim that any great newspaper in the United States is ever actuated in any of its editorial performances by any money that they can make out of their position, but I will undertake to say that if this newspaper will stand for this bill and publish the arguments in favor of it it would lose a gold mine inside of fifteen hours after the first publication. If ever there was a lobby determined and persistent, hedging up and shutting up and closing up the avenues of information to the American people in favor of any measure or against any measure, we have had that to contend with in the case of this attempt to carry into execution the purpose of this bill. Not an hour of this session of Congress has been without their presence. The London Times correspondent has sent to his paper, and the clippings have come back to me, the most ardent wishes against the passage of this bill, and I put into the RECORD the day before yesterday, as a part of my speech, the declaration made in the London Times that it was the foreign steamship companies in this country to whom they were indebted for the defeat of the bill at the last session of Congress. There has not been one day during the last few months that this agent of a London newspaper has not sought for information to show to the people across the water that there was no danger that the American people would rise to their duty and do anything upon the subject of this subsidy bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have presented this question fairly and fully to the House of Representatives. Let us state what it is. Let us state now, briefly and tersely and to the point, what this is all about. We adopted a system a great many years ago of paying a given amount of money in a round sum per annum to carry our mails into the foreign countries of the world. I said the other day that it was a Democratic proposition originally, and somebody on the other side of this House said that I said this was a Democratic measure.

I said nothing of the kind. I said that the idea, the principle, that we were carrying out in this bill was inaugurated by the Democratic party, and down to the Fifty-first Congress, when my friend from Ohio and I stood together and voted for one real ship-subsidy bill, the Democratic party had never made opposition in any form to the original purpose that was inaugurated in 1891 in the postal-service bill. We were not satisfied, and so there was passed in the Senate a thoroughbred, real ship-subsidy bill, a bill that gave subsidies upon the cargo; and a very large number of Republicans in this House stood for it. It was on that occasion, on that bill, that the Speaker of the House now, then a Member of the House, made the speech that was read by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]; and he opposed the bill at that time upon special and distinct grounds that he stated; but in the end—and the gentleman did not do justice to the Speaker's position—when an amendment was put in the bill that changed its character very materially, the Speaker voted for the bill and I voted against it. I had voted for the bill at every stage in roll call after roll call as long as the semblance of the Senate bill was maintained; and when it was destroyed, as I thought, I voted against it. I made a very great mistake in judgment in doing so, for even had the bill passed in its emasculated form it would have developed to something of extreme value to the people of the United States. So that I congratulate any present Member of the House who was a Member of that House and voted for the bill that he was nearer right than I was. Then this is to carry out a line of policy of this Government which does not differ from this in principle. Supposing now that we were paying a subsidy—and as we are—to the American ships that carry our mail to Liverpool and we pass a bill providing that those ships should go——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired for general debate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I had thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly I have not occupied thirty minutes. I began at 10 minutes to 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman began at 20 minutes to 2.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that he began at 20 minutes to 2. The clock here indicates that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That clock does not run very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate began at 10 minutes after 1 in the general debate, there being one hour left. Before the Clerk reports the bill the Chair, with the indulgence of the committee, will state that the proposition before the House is an amendment in the form of a substitute to Senate bill 529, and the Chair will treat it as one paragraph, to be read through entirely before amendments are offered.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Do I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that the whole substitute shall be read before amendments are offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would modify that by stating that the whole of the first section will be read. There are a large number of paragraphs in the first section, and the entire section will be treated as one paragraph.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it to be understood, Mr. Chairman, that there is not to be an opportunity to move to strike out one of those separate paragraphs, such as 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5?

The CHAIRMAN. After the reading of the first section is concluded, gentlemen will be recognized to offer amendments to any part of the section.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. To any part, as if offered at the time of reading?

The CHAIRMAN. As if offered at the time of reading. All bills except revenue and appropriation bills are read by sections. The Chair will state, although it may not be necessary, that as this is a substitute amendment, only one amendment can be pending at a time. An amendment to an amendment offered here would be out of order as an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read an article from the American Federationist for March, as a supplement to my speech of Tuesday last, and to have the same printed in the RECORD:

SHIP SUBSIDY—THE CHARLATANISM OF ITS "PROMOTERS."

In the January issue of the American Federationist we published an article in which was exposed some of the deception, forgery, and bribery as part of the methods of the "promoters" of ship-subsidy legislation. The exposure was so complete that it rather staggered the "promoters" and their hangers-on. In desperation the spokesman of the "promoters," Alexander R. Smith, of Cleveland (he who figured so conspicuously and unenviably in the exposé), issued a circular, which he sent to every Member of Congress. It was a labored effort to explain how he was caught in his scheme of meddling in the affairs of organized labor, trying to place it in a false position, and how he managed to play upon the weakness of an uninformed man. The circular then proceeds, by indirection, to declare that the American Federation of Labor and its representatives, and particularly its president, have not the interests of labor at heart.

Measuring men by his own standard, Mr. Smith, who never manifested activity in any public matter unless he was sure as to what there was in it for himself, insinuates that labor and its representatives are prompted by the same motives in regard to ship-subsidy legislation. Congressmen generally, and particularly those who have had some experience with Mr. Smith's former exploits, as well as his activity in the ship-subsidy promotion scheme, wholly disregarded his circular. Others, unacquainted with his tactics, desired information from the American Federation of Labor. Among the latter was the Hon. THOMAS SPIGHT, and to whose request a response was made. The letter is sufficiently comprehensive and important to warrant its publication, and we therefore print it here. It is as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
"Washington, D. C., February 7, 1907.

"Hon. THOMAS SPIGHT,
"Member of Congress, House of Representatives,
"Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: Your letter to Mr. Arthur E. Holder, a member of our legislative committee, in which you inclosed copy of a circular issued by Mr. A. R. Smith, of the Merchant Marine League—in other words, one of the chief promoters of the ship-subsidy bill—was, as you requested, turned over to me. You desire an expression of opinion from me on the matters referred to in Mr. Smith's circular.

"You will, of course, note that Mr. Smith throughout the circular refers to the opposition of labor to the ship-subsidy bill as Samuel Gompers and his organization.' The very spirit of that designation is unquestionably intended to belittle the intelligence of the men composing the great trade-union movement of the country, which constitutes the American Federation of Labor, and also is intended to convey the notion that, regardless of the wishes or the interests of the men of labor, my personal prejudices or interests dominate the whole labor movement. I refer to this simply to call attention to the petty methods which Mr. Smith employs to cast odium upon the oft-repeated declarations of the rank and file of the organized wage-earners of our country.

"No one who knows the attitude of labor and how that attitude is ascertained; no one who has any knowledge of the efforts which I have endeavored to put forth in the interests of the working people and of all the people of our country, would for a moment give credence to any statement made by Mr. Smith which in any way reflects upon the labor movement or the cause which it represents, or myself, either personally or officially.

"Take Mr. Smith's own version of his negotiations with Mr. Weeks and it is quite clear then that he took advantage of the weakness of a poor and uninformed man. However, the affidavit voluntarily made by Mr. Weeks shows clearly that Mr. Smith wantonly undertook to suborn him, and tnat he (Mr. Smith) falsely made it appear that the organization of the Marine Trades Council of New York authorized the issuance of appeals to the labor organizations of America, when, as a matter of fact, no such authority was either asked or given; that a counterfeit letter head of the Marine Trades Council was made at the instance of Mr. Smith; that a new motto which he invented was placed on the head of the counterfeit letter head; that the name of Mr. Weeks was put to documents without his consent or the consent of the Marine Trades Council, from which body the appeal was supposed to have emanated.

"We are not wholly dependent upon the statement of Mr. Weeks, but it is corroborated by the voluntary affidavit of Mr. Story in the district attorney's office of the city of New York.

"As a matter of fact, the whole transaction is of a character which Mr. Alexander R. Smith is well known to have practiced on previous occasions.

"A little more than eight years ago, when Mr. Smith could neither persuade, cajole, nor bring his other 'peculiar' influences to force me into line to help ship-subsidy legislation, he left my office uttering threats as to what he would do. What he did do was to bring a lobby to the convention of the American Federation of Labor for the double purpose of having the convention change its attitude and declare for ship subsidy, and to punish me. Just before that convention I met with a serious railroad accident, and could only attend the convention for less than a half hour of the ten days' session; yet the convention rejected, with but one dissenting vote, the proposition to indorse ship subsidy, the author of the resolution being the only one who voted for it.

"It is one of the adroit tricks of those who have a bad case to abuse and asperse the motives of anyone who differs from them. It is a favorite trick of those who are antagonistic to the labor organizations to say, among other things, that it is foreign in origin and has no place in our country, forgetting, or trying to hide the fact, that like causes produce like results, and that the industrial conditions of our country naturally produce the great organizations of labor here.

"Organized labor of America favors the building of ships to the fullest in the United States. It believes in the fullest extension and development of our industrial resources. We have urged the passage of a bill to prevent the wholesale towing of unfit or undermanned vessels. The passage of such a bill would compel the building of an immense number of vessels properly manned and which would possess their own propelling power. What has Mr. Smith, or any of those who favor ship subsidy, said in the interest of such a bill? They have allowed it to remain in committee and have never uttered a word but in opposition to it.

"American workmen, I repeat, favor the building of American ships to carry American passengers and American commerce to any part of the world, but they do not believe that a subsidy is necessary to accomplish that purpose. They believe that the principle involved in the proposition of subsidy is vicious and contrary to American principles.

"The insinuation contained in Mr. Smith's circular that either other representatives of the American Federation of Labor or I are working in the interest of foreign shipowners in foreign countries is a malicious, false, and contemptible utterance. While I am not authorized to speak for any other men in the labor movement, yet I am confident they have never, and, so far as I am concerned, I am positive I have never, had any conference or communication, directly or indirectly, with any foreign shipbuilders, shipowners of foreign countries, by representatives or otherwise, upon any subject remotely referring to the question under consideration, or, for that matter, to any other question.

"Then, again, letters which organizations have sent favorable to the passage of the ship-subsidy bill were sent under the false impression that they were aiding a measure which was asked by organized labor of the country, and they were wholly unconscious that the circular was issued under a forged signature, upon a counterfeit letter head, and without authority or consent from the organization from which it purported to emanate, and that it avoided the mention of one of the particular features of the ship-subsidy bill (the conscription provision) to which labor is particularly opposed.

"Your attention is called to Senate bill 529, of the Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, Report No. 6442, upon that bill. Together with other representatives of labor, I had occasion to appear before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on several occasions, conveying labor's protest against the passage of the so-called 'ship-subsidy bill,' particularly upon the ground that it contained provisions which made conscription (compulsory naval service of seamen) a condition precedent to their employment on privately owned vessels.

"In discussing that bill, it may be necessary to call attention to the fact that the advocates of the bill questioned the accuracy of our contention on this latter point, and asserted that the naval service required is of a voluntary character.

"It is true that the language employed in the bill gives the superficial appearance that such service, if undertaken, would be voluntary; but upon an examination of the language and its practical application, there is no escape from the conclusion that it means, and is intended to mean, compulsory naval service in time of peace or war as a condition upon which seamen can find employment in privately owned vessels; in other words, that seamen would be required to sign articles enlisting in the naval reserve before they would be permitted to earn their own livelihood and to support those dependent upon them.

"For your information I quote the provisions of the bill bearing upon this subject. The bill is known as "Senate 529 of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress.' The provisions referred to are as follows:

"'That there shall be enrolled, in such manner and under such requirements as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, from the officers and men now and hereafter employed in the merchant marine and fisheries of the United States, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Great Lakes, such officers, petty officers, and men as may be capable of rendering service as members of a naval reserve for duty in time of war. * * * These members of the naval reserve shall be enrolled for a period of four years, during which period they shall be subject to render service on call of the President in time of war. They shall also possess such qualifications, receive such instructions, and be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

"'A vessel shall not be entitled to the subvention (subsidy) above provided for unless, during the period of employment in the foreign or deep-sea fisheries, the following proportions of the crew of the vessel, after the dates specified, shall have been enrolled in the naval reserve.'

"The bill then proceeds to prescribe the continual increased proportion of the constantly increased number of those seamen employed in privately owned vessels 'who shall have been enrolled in the naval reserve.'

"It will be observed that the bill provides that enrollment of seamen is compulsory; that it prescribes that they shall be enrolled for a period of four years, compelled to render service in time of war, and subject, in times of peace, to the instructions and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy. And, further, that the vessels can not receive the subsidy unless there is a constantly increased number of seamen who shall have been enrolled in the naval service. It is not difficult to understand that if the owners of vessels can only receive the subsidy upon the condition that their seamen shall have enrolled themselves in the naval service, that these owners will insist upon their seamen signing the articles of enlistment in order that they may be employed.

"The theory, declared the American Federation of Labor at its last convention, upon which the bill is drawn and the reasons given by its advocates are that we have not the vessels needed as auxiliaries to the Navy and not all the men needed to man the Navy in time of war. Accepting these contentions as facts, it is contended therefore that the cost of building a vessel in an American shipyard and the cost of sailing a vessel under the American flag in the foreign trade is so much higher than that under other flags that a subsidy is necessary. It is further contended that with an adequate subsidy we shall have more vessels, and having more vessels, we shall have all the native or naturalized seamen needed.

"That we have not now the necessary number of native or naturalized seamen needed for the merchant marine and the Navy is a fact not disputed; it is patent to all who are at all acquainted with maritime conditions. The American boy is not seeking the sea as a means of livelihood, and the American man at sea is seeking and finding more agreeable and more remunerative employment on shore.

"There is employed at present, according to the census, about 120,000 men as seamen or deep-sea fishermen under our flag, and among the seamen from 10 to 15 per cent are either natives or naturalized; the rest are men owing allegiance to other flags and not subject to draft upon order of the President.

"If the seamen and fishermen employed in our fisheries and our coastwise and lake trades were either native or naturalized Americans, the number of men necessary for the Navy could at any time be obtained. The difficulty, therefore, lies not so much in the number of men as in the number of men available, and the primary cause is that for some reasons the American does not seek the sea or remain there. If the American does not seek the coastwise trade, where there is no competition with the foreign vessels, and small wages and onerous conditions are not caused thereby or an excuse therefor, there seems to be no reason why he should seek employment in the foreign trade, where the shipowner has the reason of competition for the wages and conditions which he imposes upon the seamen. The American ceased to go to sea because he could do better on shore than he possibly could at sea, where, no matter what his industry and thrift, he could not and can not earn sufficient upon which to keep a family.

"As to the cost of operating a vessel under the American flag, the contention that American vessels in the foreign trade provide better quarters, more and better food, that they carry more men and pay more wages than vessels under other flags, is not based upon facts. When the steamers Paris and New York were placed under the American flag, the number of firemen and coal passers and of able and ordinary seamen was reduced.

"The wages of sailors and marine firemen depend upon the port in which they are engaged and the voyage they are about to make, and not at all upon the flag under which the vessel sails; and our law, enacted in 1884, gave to the shipowner the right to hire his crew in a foreign port, bring them to the United States and back to a foreign port without reshipping them in the United States. This puts him on an absolute equality as to wages, exclusive of officers, with any country with which he trades. He pays English wages if he trades with England, French wages if he trades with France, and Chinese wages if he trades with China; the law gives him this privilege, and he avails himself of it to the fullest extent.

"The other costs of operating a vessel are coal, lubricating oils, and provisions; like other vessels, he buys it where it is cheapest. If it be a sailing vessel, it consists in spars, canvas, ropes, and blocks, and these things we furnish to other nations to a very large extent.

"Since the organization of our Government no industry has been as well cared for through absolute authority over the men employed therein, through immunities granted and special privileges conferred, as has been the merchant marine. By law enacted in 1790 the seaman was made the property of the vessel upon which he served. If he sought to withdraw himself from the servitude of his master, he could be and he was arrested, put in prison, there to remain until called for by such master. If he succeeded in escaping from his service and his master, he could be and he was pursued from State to State, or from one country into another, forcibly returned to his master, and compelled to continue the labor on pain of imprisonment. When involuntary servitude was taken off the negro by war and the thirteenth amendment and the statutes revised accordingly, the vessel's ownership of the seaman remained undisturbed. Conditions as to quarters on board, food, and working hours were by Congress left at the discretion of the owner. Some improvements have been made, but the seamen's status yet remains that of a serf or a peon. He is still compelled to live in a place 6 feet long, 6 feet high, and 2 feet wide. In this place he has to eat, to live, and to sleep, when off duty. It has been described as too large for a coffin and not large enough for a grave. He is still compelled to sign away in the foreign trade a certain sum of the wages to be earned in order to obtain employment. He must obey any order from the master or any other officer or go to prison. But if crippled for life by injury thereby received, he has no remedy. He must in obtaining employment compete with the unskilled and destitute, not only in this country, but from all nations and races. The vessels are undermanned, both as to skill and number, and the shipowner is resisting every improvement by every means within his power.

"In the meantime the shipowners have been relieved of risks arising from acts of God or dangers of the sea through a system of insurance; arising from piracy through the present imperfect policing of the seas; from those arising from popular local disturbances through damages paid by such localities or States; of liabilities to the shipper, passenger, or seaman through limited liability laws and judicial decisions; of taxes on floating property by several States; of fees to be paid for the enforcement of navigation laws, except in some unimportant instances; of care and cure of sick seamen, cost of which is now borne by the Public Treasury, and the burial of dead seamen, who are handed over to the coroner and then buried by the community; of the duty to carry a certain number of citizens in the crew of the vessel; of the duty of training men for the sea service now done by foreigners or in training ships at public expense. In addition to this he may carry as many or as few men as he pleases, with such skill or lack of skill as he chooses; he may carry as much cargo on deck and load his vessel to any depth that he thinks profitable. There are no laws or regulations on these subjects.

"He may hire and, in a foreign port in the foreign trade, by assistance of the police, keep the cheapest men that can be found in any part of the world.

"Under our coastwise navigation laws he has an absolute monopoly of all trade from one American port to another.

"Under the act of 1892 he may make contracts to carry the mail, through which he receives more pay for this service than he pays in wages to every man and boy employed on his vessel as a seaman in any capacity.

"Having been relieved of risks and liabilities, and having been given immunities as have been herein mentioned, and having driven the American from the sea, thereby weakening our Navy, and now employing and thereby training foreigners and men of alien and antagonistic races, making them ready to be employed by other navies, he insists upon continuing these conditions, while he urges Congress to further tax the whole American people to help him carry on his private business.

"The convention then reiterated its condemnation of any such legislation, and especially against this bill with its un-American provision for conscription.

"In passing, it may not be amiss to say that the workingmen of our country, the organized workingmen, are no less patriotic than any of our citizens in other walks of life. In all the great events and vicissitudes, when the honor, the interests, and the safety of our country have been at stake none more promptly, zealously, and patriotically enlisted and offered their services and lives under the flag of the Republic than did the men of labor. We have lost none of our love for and devotion to our country. The past is but a presage of what the toilers of America will do should the necessity ever arise, but we can not refrain from entering an emphatic protest against an attempt to subvert a principle of civilized government, and particularly republican institutions, by a system of conscription and compulsory military or naval service, especially in times of peace, even if conscription and compulsory service are hidden disingenuously behind the subterfuge that they are voluntary.

"You will please note the substitute for Senate bill 529, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, that section 3 in its entirety is a practical restatement of the provisions of the compulsory naval-service feature of the original bill. Every organization in the boiler making, shipbuilding, and kindred trades has gone on record deliberately and repeatedly as opposed to ship-subsidy legislation. Mr. Smith in his circular quotes a so-called 'United Boiler Makers' Association.' You should know that this so-called 'united boiler makers' is composed of a few locals of the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-Ship Builders of America, which seceded from the parent organization upon an entirely different subject and in no way related to the ship-subsidy proposition. It forms but a very insignificant part of the trade in the United States. It assumed this position simply as a matter of pique and antagonism because of the other differences which exist.

"I should be glad to submit to you originals and copies of the correspondence which passed between Mr. Smith and Mr. William J. Gilthorpe, secretary-treasurer of the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-Ship Builders of America, in which it is clearly shown that the efforts of Mr. Smith, acting for the promoters of ship subsidy, in trying to suborn Mr. Gilthorpe and induce him to follow just such a course and practice with his organization were the same as he (Mr. Smith) used in his scheme to suborn Mr. Weeks.

"It may not be uninteresting for you to know that there is not a promoter of ship-subsidy legislation but who has antagonized in Congress every bill of a tangible character which might favorably affect the interests of the working people of our country—the eight-hour bill, the bill to regulate and limit the abuse of the issuance of injunctions, the bill to accord to seamen the right of ownership in themselves, and all other measures for which labor has asked at the hands of Congress.

"There are other additional interesting matters in connection with this subject which I hope for the opportunity to present to you for your consideration, but this letter is already too long to attempt at their incorporation here.

"Very truly, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
"President American Federation of Labor."

In the first session of the present Congress the ship-subsidy "promoters" brought a body of half dozen "labor" men to Washington, who, without authority, and, in fact, against the distinct declarations of their organizations, made a pretense that they were voicing the sentiments of labor when they hypocritically asked for ship subsidy "in the interest of labor." These "labor" men were and are well known to be out of touch and sympathy—and some out of membership—with organized labor. While in Washington at the time, they were seen and heard wrangling as to the money consideration they received from the ship-subsidy "promoters" for their dirty part in the dirty business.

It seems to be the part assigned by the "promoters" to Mr. Alexander R. Smith to seek out some poor, weak-kneed men in the labor movement to cajole, flatter, or hoodwink them; if these fail, to suborn or bribe them. In our efforts to advocate, protect, and further the interests of the toiling millions of our country we have at times run counter to these men, and in every instance the origin of their having "gone wrong" was immediately traceable to the ship-subsidy "promoters," of which Alexander R. Smith is the conspicuous figure.

We can find no more fitting description of the work and methods of the men engaged in the effort to fasten ship subsidy, and particularly conscription, upon the people than our opening characterization of them in the January article in the American Federationist: "In all our country there is not a more corrupt gang than the well-known coterie who are engaged in the scheme to 'promote' ship-subsidy legislation."

We commend to ship-subsidy "promoters" the well-known, but oft despised, couplet:

"What a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive!"

The Clerk read as follows:

That the act entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce," approved March 3, 1891, be, and hereby is, amended by adding thereto the following section:

"SEC. 10. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts for a term of ten years, with citizens of the United States, for the carrying of mails on steamships hereafter built in the United States and registered in the United States, or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof, a majority of the stock of which shall be and shall continue to be owned by citizens of the United States), between ports of the United States and ports on the routes and for the amounts hereinafter prescribed.

"First. From a port or ports of the Atlantic coast of the United States to Brazil, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year.

"Second. From a port or ports of the Atlantic coast of the United States to Argentina, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a monthly compensation not exceeding $400,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $800,000 a year: Provided, That a vessel receiving compensation for mail service pursuant to contract on a voyage on this route shall not also receive compensation for mail service pursuant to contract on said voyage on the first route as described above.

"Third. From a port or ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to the Isthmus of Panama, on steamships of the United States of not less than 14 knots speed, for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $75,000 a year, or for a weekly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $150,000 a year.

"Fourth. From a port or ports of the Pacific coast of the United States to the Isthmus of Panama, Peru, and Chile, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year.

"Fifth. From a port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii to Japan, China, and the Philippines on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $350,000 a year or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $700,000 a year.

"Sixth. From a port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States north of Cape Mendocino to Japan, China, and the Philippines on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $350,000 a year or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $700,000 a year.

"Seventh. From a port or ports of the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii and the Samoan Islands to Australasia, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a service once in three weeks at a maximum compensation not exceeding $200,000 a year, in addition to the compensation now provided pursuant to contract under this said act of March 3, 1891: Provided, That the requirements of this section as to the rates of speed shall be deemed to be complied with if said rates are developed during a trial of four hours continuous steaming at sea in ordinary weather in water of sufficient depth to make the test a fair and just one and if the vessels are maintained in a condition to develop such speed at any time while at sea in ordinary weather. This trial shall be made under the direction and supervision of a board of naval officers which the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint upon the application of the owner or owners of the vessel to be tested: And provided further, That all the provisions of the first nine sections of this act are hereby made applicable in all respects to the services provided for in this section: Provided, however, That the specific rates of compensation described in section 5 of this act shall not apply to the services provided for in this section, and that all ordinary repair or overhauling of a steamship employed and paid for carrying mails under this section shall be made in the United States, except in cases where drydocking is necessary and no American dry dock of sufficient capacity shall be within a distance of 500 miles of the location of said ship when the repairs shall be needed."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Add, in line 11, on page 16, the following:

"From a port or ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to Brazil, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the bill, as originally proposed, contemplated two lines from some port or ports on the Atlantic coast to the east coast of South America—one line to Brazil and one line to Argentina.

The purpose of the amendment I have offered is to give an additional line of communication between a port on the Gulf and Brazil. It has developed clearly here that a very substantial business is now going on and can be greatly promoted from some port on the Gulf to South America. To-day a very large tonnage, particularly of coffee, comes from Brazil to New Orleans. Moreover, it will give opportunity for the promotion of our commerce with South America, and enable the products of the great Mississippi Valley and the manufactures of the Central West to reach, in the cheapest way, the ports of South America. The two lines from the Atlantic coast provided for, with a fortnightly service, would give from the Atlantic ports to Rio Janeiro a weekly service, each one of those lines being proposed for fortnightly service, and no doubt the Postmaster-General, in his submission of proposals, would demand that those lines so arrange their time of departure that one vessel would leave the Atlantic coast each week for Brazil, of course with a continuation as far as Argentina and Uruguay every other trip.

Now, this connection of a line from a Gulf port will add a further fortnightly service to Rio Janeiro, where again the cargoes are transshipped on the fortnightly leaving ships for the more distant southern ports.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does not the gentleman believe that if this amendment which he now proposes is adopted one of the lines from New York could be abandoned, leaving one line simply from New York, by way of Rio Janeiro to Buenos Ayres.

Mr. LITTAUER. The gentleman's proposition is that if we establish this line from the outlet of the Mississippi Valley, from a Gulf port to Brazil, we could omit from the bill the provision for one of the lines from Atlantic coast ports to South America. I should very much regret to see that done. Of course, if in the judgment of the committee you want to keep this matter down to the lowest possible expenditure, that would be one phase of it; but if we are seeking here to do what we believe to be most necessary for the interests of the United States in the development of commerce with South America, it should be remembered that the greater part of the demand for our manufactures and the greater part of our commerce with South America will be on the east coast, and I think we could well provide for three lines running from our ports.

Mr. BIRDSALL. Why not provide that this line shall also touch in Central America?

Mr. LITTAUER. Right on that point, I want to say that all of these lines run from some given port to some other given port. There is nothing, however, that precludes their stopping on the way. There is no reason at all why the line running from the Gulf port to Panama should not stop at Honduras.

Mr. BIRDSALL. I agree with the gentleman perfectly, but the question is whether the Postmaster-General would require it under this provision.

Mr. LITTAUER. The Postmaster-General can require it, and then another thing, these mail subsidies are not given to pay all the expenses of the conduct of these lines. They must be made profitable by the carriage of passengers and freight, and surely the opportunity of getting more freight from an intermediate port will not be neglected by the line.

Mr. BIRDSALL. I believe that the Gulf line ought to touch at a Central American port.

Mr. LITTAUER. I believe it will, but what port would the gentleman suggest? If we attempt to suggest a particular port by legislation, I think we will make a mistake.

Mr. BIRDSALL. The point in my mind was that the amendment ought to say that it should touch at some Central American port.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this amendment makes this a better bill, or nearer to a constitutional bill from my standpoint, than the bill would be without it. It increases the number of ports from which these subsidized vessels are to go in carrying our commerce from this country and coming back into those ports in this country.

Mr. Chairman, the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another, nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

This constitutional question was discussed in February, 1879, by one of our great lawyers and statesmen, and at that time, of course, a Member of this House, John Randolph Tucker. He took the position that a similar provision in the then pending bill to the one now offered and various other propositions was giving preference to one port over those of another, and was clearly in the face of this constitutional provision. He spoke to the amendment that provided for a subsidy to a ship running from New York to a port in his own State, Virginia. With the kind indulgence of the House, I shall read the words of that great man:

Now, I am for privileges to none and equal justice to all. The proposition is to grant this aid or subsidy for a steam line between New York via the city of Norfolk, in my own State of Virginia, to Brazil; and a steam line from New Orleans via Galveston to Brazil. This is giving a preference to the ports of one State over the ports of another

State, which are in competition in the matter of commerce with foreign countries. The Constitution inhibits any preference given to the ports of one State over another by any regulation of commerce. I therefore am bound, even if this was a subsidy to my own loved Commonwealth of Virginia alone, to vote against it, because I am bound to support the Constitution of the United States. I therefore shall vote against it, although there is a bait to me as a Virginian, for there is to be a steam line to go from New York to Brazil by way of Norfolk.

Now, sir, it is not only this, but as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] has shown from a description of the character of vessel that is to carry the mails, it is for John Roach, and John Roach alone. It is a contract for ten years to give a privilege to John Roach over all the other citizens of this country in the carrying trade between the United States and Brazil. I can not vote for it, therefore, because it gives preference to one State over another and because it gives preference to one citizen of the United States over all the other forty-eight millions of citizens. For these reasons I shall vote against these propositions.

I do not know what became of that bill; I think it was finally defeated. And now we have in this bill the exact proposition. I do not find in the debates on this bill in 1879 anywhere—and I have run through them in the House—where any man in the House disputed Mr. Tucker's proposition of law. Here is a proposition in this bill to subsidize ships going away from certain ports in the United States to other ports, not all, in the United States. It gives preference over ships that go to those ports; it gives preference over the commerce that goes to those ports; it gives especial privileges to those ports and to the commerce that goes thereto and the ships that are regulated by this subsidy.

It seems to me it is a very plain proposition that we are making fish of one and fowl of another unless we subsidize all the vessels from all the ports of the United States. Under the authority I have quoted, under the words of the Constitution, we are flying into the face of the Constitution, which prohibits these invidious distinctions and preferences to some over other ports.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the amendment. I have prepared an amendment which accomplishes practically the same result. If the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] carries, there will be two lines running from the Atlantic seaboard to South America—one to Brazil and another to Argentina.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I should like to see adopted and the amendment of the gentleman from New York voted down. Should that be done, we will have only one line on the Atlantic seaboard running to Argentina, with stops at Brazil or Rio Janeiro, and another line running from the Gulf of Mexico to Brazil.

When we come to examine our trade relations with those countries we find that practically all of our exports to Argentina are manufactured products. That is natural in view of the fact that Argentina has the same climatic conditions as the United States. Practically all of our exports to Brazil are food products. We ship some manufactured products also, but the great percentage of exports to Brazil are food products.

The natural outlet from the United States for our food products is to the Gulf. I believe that two lines to South America are ample. If this amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] should be voted down and mine should then be adopted, this bill would add to the amount of mail subsidies that are now provided $1,443,000, making a total of $5,250,000 a year. That compares well with the subsidies paid by the most progressive countries of the world.

Mr. LITTAUER. How does the gentleman get at the $5,250,000?

Mr. POLLARD. We already pay $1,500,000 a year under the act of 1891, and the present bill carries $3,750,000, making a total of $5,250,000, or thereabouts. That, as I say, will place the United States on a comparatively equal footing with the most progressive countries of the world. England pays in mail subsidies $6,000,000 annually. France pays $5,000,000 in mail subsidies and three and a half million in tonnage subsidies. The most progressive nations of the world to-day are only paying subsidies for fast-mail service, no subventions being paid on tonnage subsidies other than by France; and it seems to me that all that is needed at this time is for the United States to stand shoulder to shoulder or in the same rank with Great Britain in the matter, and we will do that if we carry no more than is now contained in the bill. Consequently I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York will not prevail.

Mr. PAYNE. Would it not answer the same purpose that the gentleman has in view, if the amendment of my colleague should be adopted, by moving afterwards to amend by striking out one of these other lines? If the House would agree to that, it would accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. POLLARD. It would accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not mean to intimate that I am for that later motion, but that would leave the parliamentary situation the same in the thing to be accomplished; so that the better way, it seems to me, would be to adopt my colleague's amendment, and then the gentleman would be in order to move to strike out one of these lines.

Mr. LITTAUER. As I understand the gentleman's proposition, it is preferable to have a line to Brazil running from a Gulf port than from the Atlantic coast proper?

Mr. POLLARD. Yes.

Mr. LITTAUER. If my amendment should be adopted, then the gentleman may offer an amendment striking out that part of the amendment as amended.

Mr. POLLARD. That will be all right. I am content with that action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Let us have the amendment again reported.

There was no objection; and the amendment was again reported.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, before beginning to speak to this amendment I should like to ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman want to speak to this amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall speak partially to the amendment. My request, however, I do not care to have granted upon condition. I have not yet spoken to the bill, and if the gentleman from Ohio desires to object, I hope he will exercise that privilege without attempting to put conditions upon my speaking.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is withdrawn, and the gentleman is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this amendment, and when I shall have voted for the amendment, if it is incorporated in the bill and the bill comes before the House, I shall take great pleasure in voting against the entire bill. I do that because I believe, if we are to have subsidies, there is no reason why the country as a whole should not be treated equally. Subsidies are bad enough in any way. They are worse when they become simply sectional subsidies. Therefore I shall do what I can to perfect this subsidy bill, and shall then do what I may be able to defeat the bill.

Now, it is proper that I should give somewhat briefly, as I must, within the time I have, some of the reasons why I shall oppose the bill as a whole. In my humble judgment it proceeds upon an entirely wrong conception of the subject. It does not undertake to change in the slightest the conditions under which the American merchant marine now operates. It does not undertake to make conditions favorable for the building of American ships, for the operation of American vessels, or the growth of the American merchant marine. It does undertake simply to provide that as to certain lines the Government will agree to pay, in consideration of the carrying of mails, certain sums, and by the payment of those sums it undertakes to make profitable what is assumed in advance is an unprofitable business, for it follows, as a matter of course, that no subsidy can be decently sought for a line that could be operated profitably without that subsidy. It follows that when you give a subsidy you pay it on the assumption that the line is necessarily an unprofitable one. Now, my belief is that a great American merchant marine will never be created until we make conditions such that the business itself is profitable as a business for carrying freight from nation to nation, and not simply profitable by virtue of a special Government contract. You can create a merchant marine by subsidies to the extent that you open the Treasury of the country, and to that extent only. You can not build any single line beyond what you pay to exist, and to the extent that you create a particular line by paying it a false bonus for work performed, you put every competing line at a disadvantage.

Every line that is subsidized under this bill makes more difficult the operation of American ships in competition with that line between the ports that it will serve. In my humble judgment, some day the American people will approach this question on a broad scale. Heretofore we have been engaged in supplying largely a home market. To-day, despite our boasting, the exports of the United States per capita do not compare favorably with many countries much less in size and in greatness. The export business of the United States, outside of that covered by agriculture and the products of agriculture, is almost insignificant in comparison with the size and magnitude of the country. Now, there will be ships to carry trade when there is trade to be carried, and not before. You can in a measure help by communication between country and country, but, speaking broadly, it follows that the ships will be there when the trade is there, and will not before the trade is there. So when America reaches, as she is now reaching very rapidly, the point where her manufacturers will not be content any longer with the home market, but will be seeking the markets of the world, then something will be done to enable American ships to carry that surplus product. As it is to-day we can not build an American ship in competition with foreigners, and we can not build it because this great economic truth lies at the root of it. What is one man's finished product is another man's raw material, and to the extent that you give protection to one man's finished product you handicap the man who has to use that finished product as a raw material. The testimony taken by the Merchant Marine Commission showed the very great handicap American shipyards were under by virtue of the exorbitant prices charged for steel by the steel trust. The raw material of the shipbuilder is the finished product of the steel trust, and that product has been protected by our tariff laws from the original pig iron through each stage of its manufacture up to the finished steel, and as each bit of protection has added its quota to the cost, the shipbuilder, being the last user of the article, is heaviest handicapped. But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] boasted a day or two ago that the shipbuilder had free raw material for ships intended for the foreign trade. Now, there is no deception so great as a half truth. He failed to tell the whole story. Fortunately, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] very clearly set forth in his speech the real facts relative to the use of foreign material duty free in shipbuilding. The provision in the law that permits foreign materials to be purchased duty free also provides that ships built of such material shall not engage in the coastwise trade for more than two months in any one year. The gentleman showed by the letters he put in the RECORD that shipowners are not willing to buy ships that can not be transferred to the coastwise trade should conditions make it advisable.

No man is going to build an American ship out of foreign steel brought in bond, when as a result of that he must forever keep that ship out of the coastwise trade, no matter what may happen in the future. If we had free the materials for shipbuilding, not only for ships engaged in the foreign trade, but in the coastwise trade, the American shipyards would not only be furnishing the ships for the American merchant marine, but they would be furnishing ships for the world at large. The reason we can not build now is not so much the cost of labor as it is the fact that the shipbuilders are not able to standardize the different pieces used in constructing a ship, and they are not able to standardize because the demand for American ships is not sufficiently great; but once let them be in a position where they can compete, not only for ships for America but ships for the world, and they will be able to standardize. They will be able to do then what they have already done on the Great Lakes—build a ship as cheaply as it can be built anywhere in the world. It is a curious fact that to-day our coastwise trade is nearly one-half composed of wooden vessels, and yet the day of the wooden vessel has gone, never to return. We are using wooden vessels because in the coastwise trade, where we have given a monopoly to our American ships, the price of building the iron ships is prohibitive, and shipowners, in order to get from under this prohibition, are using antiquated wooden vessels. If the shipyards were given a fair opportunity, not to build a few ships at an extravagant price, made possible by a contribution out of the Public Treasury, but were given an opportunity to get their material as cheaply as any other people can get it, American ingenuity, American labor, the cheapest because the most intelligent, would be able to build ships cheaper than any other country in the world.

It has been well said that the building of a modern ship is but the uniting of a steam engine and a steel bridge, and this statement shows the absurdity of the argument that because of the price of labor, American-built ships must cost more than foreign-built ones. We build steel bridges and locomotives cheaper than any other country. The added price of labor is more than compensated by its intelligence and, consequently, productiveness. The real trouble lies, as I have said, in the cost of material, held at an artificial price by tariff protection and the steel trust, and by the limited demand, which prevents standardizing. But I must leave the general subject to notice the particular bill now under discussion, and the arguments now put forth in its behalf. Much has been said about subsidizing certain ships solely for the purpose of providing better mail facilities. The old idea of a subsidy for all ships, the tonnage idea, was abandoned by the committee, and they now hope by this disguise to get the nose of the camel into the tent, and subsequently bring in the whole animal. But if you will examine the provisions of this bill you will find that it can not stand justification on the ground that they now claim for it. There was not a line of testimony heard, and despite the statement made just a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], there is absolutely now no evidence before our committee or before the Committee of the Whole House showing the material, essential facts—what the ship will cost in the first instance. They can not figure that cost, because there is nothing that determines what the size of the ship shall be. This bill provides that the ships shall be able to maintain upon certain lines a speed of 16 knots. It does not say whether the ship shall be a 5,000-ton ship or a 16,000-ton ship. It does not provide for any limitation in this regard whatever, and even if the provision of the act of 1891 applied to this law in regard to the size of the ships, which is open to grave doubt, it would only require as a minimum size for 16-knot ships 5,000 tons, a ridiculously small ship.

I ask any man of intelligence how he is going to determine what is a fair sum to pay for a subsidy that will enable a line to be operated at a fair profit upon the investment, when he does not know in the first instance what the investment is going to be? Unless you can start out with knowledge of how much money is necessary to build the ships, all your other data falls. You not only do not know that, but not knowing the size of the ship, it is impossible to determine what the operating expenses are going to be. Not only is that true, but there is not a bit of evidence in regard to what the receipts will be from freight carried—not even an estimate. That is necessarily a matter that must be left in some doubt. But some of us, before we vote away the money of the country, would like to have a little bit nearer figure than the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER], that because the British Government gave to the Cunard Line a contract, which, according to his figures, represents the payment of 10 per cent upon the amount invested, therefore we should pay these sums for these lines. The Cunard contract provides for the fastest steamers afloat—for 24 to 26 knot steamers. The very moment you go from a 12-knot steamer up every additional knot of speed adds greatly to the cost of running. When you get up to ships of 20-knot speed, the additional cost for additional speed becomes almost prohibitive; and yet, upon that flimsy basis, upon the basis that the British Government has seen fit to vote 10 per cent to the Cunard Company for the fastest ships afloat, we are told that we must vote a 10 per cent subsidy to these people. And we are told that without having any real proof as to what the cost of these ships is going to be. Is there any man within the sound of my voice who dares to stand here and say that he knows and can guarantee that these ships will of necessity cost a given sum, that the operating expenses will amount to a certain sum, and that the amount of trade will yield, even approximately, a certain revenue, all the things that should be known in order intelligently to make a contract?

Why not throw off the mask? Why not quit talking about giving a subsidy for mail service and that you are only giving what you think is necessary in order to enable the lines to endure? What you are doing is this: You are simply compromising down to the point where you could get a bill on this floor voted for. [Applause.] In committee you put in everything you could make stand and stick, and then you bring the bill out and undertake to demonstrate that it is based on scientific principles. I am violating no secrets of the committee when I say that the bill was offered by a Member who was that day made a member of the committee and was immediately voted out of the committee. And this House is to expend what amounts to thirty-odd millions of dollars upon that sort of information. For my part, even though I believed in the principle, I should not be willing to vote thus ignorantly the people's money. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky be allowed ten minutes more.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not ask that indulgence.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, unless I am allowed the same time, I shall have to object.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and we do not need to discuss that.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the debate is exhausted on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER].

Mr. SHERLEY. The following statement, taken from the report of the superintendent Division of Foreign Mails of the Post-Office Department, shows the actual mail service now had:

CONTRACT OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

The contract ocean mail service upon the eight routes now in operation has been performed to the satisfaction of the Department and of the contractors.

The distance traversed, the amount paid as mileage, the weights of the mails, and the amount which would have been paid for the same service at the allowance of the full sea and United States inland postage upon the eight routes in question are as follows, viz:

| Route 75, San Francisco, Cal., to Sydney, New South Wales, 15 trips; statute miles traveled, 124,942½; mileage paid, at $2 a mile | 249,885.00 |
| Weights of the mails conveyed: Letters and post cards, 24,499 pounds; other articles, 540,483 pounds; amount of the full sea and inland postage thereon | 82,437.04 |

| Excess of cost of contract service on route 76 | 41,152.16 |
| Aggregate excess of cost of contract service | 393,559.62 |

Under date of February 14, 1905, bids were invited for the service from San Francisco to Tahiti for a period of ten years from July 1, 1905, and on the 1st of June, 1905, the bid of the Oceanic Steamship Company to perform the service (10 trips a year), at the rate of $1 a mile, was accepted.

The ocean mail contract service should be credited also with the carriage of the closed mails of foreign origin forwarded during the year from this country by means of steamers under contract with this Department.

The weights of said closed mails amounted to 27,465,589 grams (60,561 pounds) of letters and post cards and 123,759,003 grams (272,889 pounds) of other articles, for the conveyance of which steamers not under contract would have been entitled to compensation at the rate of 5 francs per kilogram of letters and post cards and 50 centimes per kilogram of other articles; or to a total sum of $38,447.04. Deducting that sum from the "aggregate excess of cost," we find as the net excess of cost of the contract service $355,112.58.

TRANSATLANTIC MAILS.

As heretofore, the mails for Great Britain and the Continent of Europe have been dispatched by every fast steamer, and when two fast steamers sail on the same day or succeeding days, the mails have been as a rule assigned to the one whose previous record gave reason to believe that it would deliver the mails sooner on the other side of the Atlantic. Other things being equal, preference has been given to steamers sailing under the flag of the United States, and especially to those under contract with this Department, at a compensation of $4 for each mile traveled from New York to Southampton.

Steamers flying the flag of the United States, but not under contract, are allowed for their services all the postage collected on the mails they carry from this country; that is to say, 5 cents a half ounce ($1.60 a pound, or $3,200 a short ton) for letters and post cards and 1 cent for 2 ounces (8 cents a pound, or $160 a short ton) for other articles. In the case of a steamer conveying the mails under a foreign flag compensation for the service is allowed at the rate of 44 cents a pound (or $880 a short ton) for letters and post cards and 4½ cents a pound (or $90 a short ton) for other articles, calculated on the actual net weight of the mails conveyed.

The transfer service in New York Harbor, whereby the fast mail steamers arriving from Europe are met at the quarantine station by a special mail steamer, which receives the mails and conveys them as rapidly as possible to the various wharves, whence the mails for the city of New York are immediately sent to the post-office in that city, and those for inland destinations are forwarded by the first outgoing trains, has been continued without accident or interruption.

CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICAN AND WEST INDIAN MAILS.

There have been no radical changes in the service to these countries during the year. Our communication with the west coast of Central and South America has been regular and reliable, about eight times a month, by means of steamers plying between New York and Colon; and to Venezuela we have a weekly service, by means of the Red "D" Line, which is performing contract service between New York and La Guaira and other ports of Venezuela, under the provisions of the act of Congress aproved March 3, 1891. Contract service is also performed once a week by the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company between New York and Habana, and once a week between New York and certain Mexican Gulf ports via Habana. Besides, there is additional through service with Cuba by means of steamers plying three times a week from Tampa, Fla., and once a week from New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala., to Habana, Cuba, and by means of steamers of the Munson Line sailing from New York twice a month for northern Cuban ports. The service from Tampa is performed under a domestic contract, and does not come under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891. With Porto Rico we have mail communication regularly once a week by means of steamers of the Red "D" Line and by means of steamers of the New York and Porto Rico line, which sail on alternate Saturdays from New York and irregularly twice a month from New Orleans, the latter service being performed under a domestic-mail contract from New York for San Juan, and also irregularly about once a month from New York to Porto Rico.

With Jamaica we have contract ocean-mail service by means of steamers of the American Mail Steamship Company, sailing twice a week from Boston or Philadelphia for Port Antonio, Jamaica. Besides, Hamburg-American steamers of the Atlas Line sail regularly every Saturday from New York for Kingston, and steamers of the Royal Mail Line sail every two weeks from New York to Kingston.

Communication with the other West Indian islands has been maintained without material change, and principally by means of the New York and Cuba Mail, Quebec, Hamburg-American (Atlas), Clyde, Booth, Royal Dutch West India Mail, Trinidad, Bahamas, Demerara, Royal Mail, Peninsular and Occidental, and Earn lines of steamers.

With British Honduras (Belize), Guatemala, and the Republic of Honduras we have regular communication by means of steamers which sail every Thursday from New Orleans. By steamers sailing from the same port every Thursday for Nicaragua and every Friday for Costa Rica we have regular weekly communication with Nicaragua and Costa Rica and frequent, although irregular, communication with Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Republic of Honduras, and Panama; and from Mobile, Ala., we have frequent, although irregular, service with Progreso, Mexico; Bocas del Toro, Panama; Belize, British Honduras, and the Republic of Honduras.

By means of the Lamport and Holt, Sloman, American Rio Plata, Norton, Barber, Prince, Booth, Tweedie Trading, and Houston lines, mails for Brazil and the River Plata countries have been dispatched 177 times by steamers sailing from New York for those countries direct—for Brazil 83 times, and for the River Plata countries 94 times. Correspondence for Brazil and the River Plata countries is not, however, held for dispatch by these steamers, but is forwarded via England when that course will expedite its delivery at destination.

TRANSPACIFIC MAILS.

By means of steamers sailing three or four times a month from San Francisco and three or four times a month from Seattle or Tacoma, mails for Japan and China have been dispatched not less than seven times a month.

These mails have included articles for the Philippines, but mails for the Philippines have also been dispatched by Army transports, which sailed from San Francisco for Manila about every twenty days. Correspondence for Japan and China has also been forwarded to Vancouver, British Columbia, for dispatch per steamers leaving that port about every three weeks, when the delivery of the correspondence would be thereby expedited.

Mails for the Australasian colonies have been dispatched from San Francisco once every three weeks by means of the contract steamers of the Oceanic Steamship Company, the transit time from San Francisco to Sydney being twenty-one days, and mails being delivered en route at Pago Pago.

Advantage is also taken of the opportunities offered for the dispatch of correspondence for those colonies by means of the Canadian Line of steamers sailing from Vancouver, British Columbia, once every four weeks.

The Oceanic steamers and those from Vancouver, above referred to, call at Honolulu, and most of the steamers en route from San Francisco to Japan and China usually call at Honolulu. Including the service under domestic mail contracts between San Francisco and Honolulu, there were from seven to ten opportunities a month for communication by mail with Hawaii, and generally there are not less than eight.

Mails for China, Japan, and the Australasian colonies are forwarded from San Francisco to Honolulu, to be transferred there to steamers sailing from Vancouver and calling at Honolulu en route to those countries; and mails for the United States arriving at Honolulu by steamers bound for Vancouver are transferred to steamers sailing from Honolulu to San Francisco. By such transfers the delivery of the mails so transferred is expedited by three or four days.

Inasmuch as great stress has been laid on the statement that under contract service on route 37 the Government made a saving of $147,904.08, it may be well to call attention to the fact that if the 449,194 pounds of letters and post cards and the 2,397,901 pounds of other mail matter had been carried by the faster steamers of the foreign lines it would have cost the Government $305,550.90, or $457,087.50 less than was paid the subsidized American line. The profit claimed in the Post-Office report is based on the idea that if not carried by the subsidized American line it would have had to be carried at the sea and inland postage rate of $1.60 a pound for letters and 8 cents a pound for other articles, whereas it could have been carried for 44 cents and 4 cents a pound, respectively, the price paid foreign ships.

Statement showing shipping facilities, etc., from New York with Brazil.

NORTH BRAZIL.

Booth Line to north Brazil, Booth & Co., agents, have steamers about every ten days to Para, Manaos, Maranham, Ceara, and Parnahyba. This line uses British steamers, the carrying capacity of which will average about 3,000 tons. The rates on general cargo are about 25 cents to 40 cents per cubic foot; case oil, about 35 cents per case; lumber, about $15 per 1,000 superficial feet.

BRAZIL.

The following lines, Lamport & Holt Line, Busk & Jevons, agents; Prince Line, Busk & Javons, agents; Sloman Line, Funch, Edye & Co., agents, work together, and their sailings are about as follows: Lamport & Holt Line, a sailing monthly; Prince Line, three sailings every two months; Sloman Line, three sailings every two months. The ports at which these steamers call are Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Santos, Pernambuco, Macelo, and Victoria. Each steamer does not call at all ports, the lines arranging the order of ports as best suits the trade. The carrying capacity of these steamers will average about 3,000 tons.

In opposition to these lines are the Lloyd Brazileiro, John C. Seager Company, agents; Tweedie Line, Tweedie Trading Company, agents. The Lloyd Brazileiro is subsidized by the Brazilian Government, and we understand when first started it was their intention to run only Brazilian steamers; but these were rather small for the trade, and, owing to the success they have met with, the New York agent of this line has found it necessary to charter at least two steamers a month to Brazil ports. The Lloyd Brazileiro steamers will carry on an average of about 2,500 tons each, but the steamers which the line charter will average in carrying capacity about 4,500 tons each. This line has only been in operation since about September last.

The Tweedie Trading Company, in both the River Plata and Brazil trades, carries on a more or less guerilla warfare. Their service is not regular, and most of their steamers which sail from New York call at a southern United States port for rosin or lumber; consequently the service is not desirable for ordinary general cargo shipments.

The rates of freight on general cargo vary from 18 to 30 cents per cubic foot; lumber, $15 per 1,000 superficial feet; case oil, 20 cents per case, free from alongside—that is, shippers have to send lighters to take the freight from the steamer; rosin, $1.10 per barrel of 280 pounds.

With the exception of the Lloyd Brazileiro, the steamers used in this trade by the above firms are practically all British steamers. Occasionally a Norweigan steamer is chartered, and the Lamport & Holt Line at times use some Belgian steamers, which they operate.

The Lamport & Holt Line employ the Tennyson and Byron, which are passenger steamers, in this trade and have practically a monopoly of the passenger traffic between New York and Brazil and River Plata ports, as well as the passenger traffic homeward. These steamers alternate in monthly sailings.

Statement showing shipping facilities, etc., from New York with Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Bolivia.

These countries are reached by the steamers which load here for River Plata ports, i. e., Montevideo, Buenos Ayres, and Rosario. Occasionally a steamer will stop at Bahia Blanca or La Plata.

The lines operating the River Plata service are: Norton Line, Norton & Son, agents; Lamport & Holt Line, Busk & Jevons, agents; Prince Line, Busk & Jevons, agents; Houston Line, R. P. Houston & Co., agents, which lines have a weekly service, each line having a steamer every four weeks. Tweedie Line, Tweedie Trading Company, agents; Barber Line, Barber & Co. (Incorported), agents; American Rio Plata Line, Howard Houlder, Rowat & Co. (Limited), agents, which latter three lines work in opposition to the first four named lines, and while they have no definite set date for the dispatch of their steamers, they advertise them as nearly as possible to the expected sailing date. I would mention that it is very rarely that these steamers sail on their advertised sailing dates, as they do not leave until they are fully loaded, and, of course, condition of deliveries and weather conditions always affect sailing dates, but are never taken into consideration when the date advertised is fixed.

I inclose herewith a list giving the name and net registered tonnage (taken from Lloyd's) of each and every steamer which sailed during 1906 from the port of New York to River Plate ports. Taking these steamers on an average of about 6,000 tons freight capacity each, would show that about 600,000 tons of carge was shipped from New York to River Plate ports during the year 1906. I think you can figure that there was at least this amount, and I should not be surprised if it reached 750,000 tons. I have not had an opportunity to go into the carrying capacity of each individual steamer.

All of these steamers are foreign ships, and over 90 per cent of them fly the English flag.

The Norton Line, Lamport & Holt Line, Prince Line, Houston Line, and American Rio Plata Line are operated by English firms, the representatives here being merely agents. The Tweedie Line and the Barber Line are operated by New York firms, they chartering the steamers necessary to load on the berth; and while they are apparently independent, I am inclined to think that both of these firms are supported by English owners.

All of these steamers from New York to River Plate ports carry United States mail, being paid according to the quantity carried.

There is no direct passenger service between New York and River Plata ports, as the American passenger laws are too stringent. In fact, these steamers have no passenger accommodations; but if they had, under the British Board of Trade regulations, even this would not permit of their carrying passengers under the requirements of the United States law. All passengers from New York to Argentina go by way of Brazil by the Lamport & Holt Line of steamers, or via Europe.

Rates of freight.—The last three lines mentioned above are in opposition to the first four named, and consequently rates have been fluctuating during 1906 and also during 1905, owing to this competition. Rates have varied during the year from 7 to 20 cents per cubic foot on ordinary general cargo. Included under the heading of "General cargo" is a considerable quantity of agriculturals and binder twine, shipped from this country to the Argentine Republic, on which rates vary from 12 to 16½ cents per cubic foot, depending entirely upon the kinds of implements shipped; on lumber, $11 and $12 per 1,000 superficial feet; rosin, about 80 cents per barrel of 280 pounds; case oil, about 20 cents per case; plain and barbed wire and nails, $3.60 per ton of 2,240 pounds. Steel rails and car material, which, of course, go forward in large quantities, are usually booked under special contract. These rates would be considered fair under normal conditions; but unfortunately the River Plate ports are congested, owing to the large quantity of cargo being imported into the Argentine, the facilities there being limited, and steamers have been experiencing delay in the discharge of from two weeks to three months. While I state above that the rates would be considered fair, there has been no money made, owing to these conditions and because the lines were fighting among themselves. Statistics will show you how the importations from the United States into the Argentine through River Plate ports compare with imports from other countries.

The Norton Line and the Houston Line steamers and some of the steamers of the Barber and Tweedie lines are the only ones which carry cargo from the River Plate ports to Boston and New York via ports in Porto Rico and Cuba. The steamers of the other lines taking freight from New York to the River Plate carry cargo from River Plate ports to European ports or go to Brazil for a cargo to Europe or the United States.

MISLEADING REPORTS ON SHIPPING FROM CONSULS—MARITIME INTERESTS BELIEVE INTENDED TO AID SUBSIDIES—CONSUL-GENERAL IN THE ARGENTINE CREDITED WITH SAYING THAT ALL AMERICAN GOODS IMPORTED ARE SENT BY WAY OF ENGLAND—THE SITUATION IN BRAZIL SET FORTH.

Shipping interests at this port identified especially with South American trade are astounded at statements regarding shipping that are being printed from time to time in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports, issued by the Bureau of Manufactures. They are very frank in saying they believe the object of such erroneous statements is to bolster up the schemes of the subsidy hunters with information which, for the reason it is published by the Government, will be regarded as authentic.

The head of one of the largest shipping firms in this city said in course of a conversation on Thursday:

"The Consular Reports published by the Government under date of February 21 include a statement by the consul-general of the United States situated in the Argentine that is incomprehensive in that it is absolutely contrary to facts, and coming from such an official source and published as it is officially by the Government, the document is in every way erroneous, misleading, and a danger to the actual conditions, as the information is distributed broadcast throughout our country under the official cloak of our Government, and must necessarily be accepted by nine hundred and ninety-nine people out of one thousand as truthful.

"The consul-general states that all American goods imported in the Argentine Republic from the United States go by the way of England. Both our own Government and everybody in the trade know that this statement is absolutely without foundation, and that no goods whatsoever in the ordinary course of trade are dispatched to the Argentine Republic via England or any other European port. There is almost a daily service of steamers direct from the United States ports to the Argentine Republic, ranging from 3,000 to 10,000 tons capacity each.

"In the same issue of the Consular Reports we turn to the United States consul in Brazil making statements that are almost as contrary to the facts as the statements that we have alluded to above.

"One can not help but think that the trend of all this published matter is in furtherance of the subsidy schemes now being pushed before Congress, and one hesitates to think that the public servants of the United States Government would so belittle themselves and pervert the truth for political purposes. Furthermore one must criticise most severely the General Government for publishing such glaring false statements."

In part, the item regarding shipping to Argentina referred to follows:

"Consul-General Alban G. Snyder calls attention to the fact that there is practically no direct trade communication between the United States and Buenos Ayres, all American goods imported being sent by way of England. Mr. Snyder shows the bad effects of this situation, and tells in the following letter what should be done toward improving American trade in Argentina:

"'The service between Europe and Buenos Ayres is regular and the trips are frequent, taking but from sixteen to twenty days, whereas voyages to the United States frequently take from twenty-five to fifty days. The chief improvement in the matter of shipping facilities between the United States and Buenos Ayres should be the establishment of a fast steamship line between the two countries, as the present service may be considered the greatest drawback to the upbuilding of American trade with the Argentine Republic.

"'During the year 1905 but one cargo of lumber and one of car materials arrived in Buenos Ayres from the United States, this being about from 1 to 2 per cent of the number of foreign vessels arriving at this port. In the same period of time eight American sailing vessels left Buenos Ayres for the United States, none carrying cargo. Only one American steamship has called at the port in the past two years. During the year named 143 (mostly English) vessels cleared from Buenos Ayres carrying hides and skins, hair, quebracho wood, extract of quebracho wood, and wool. While there are but five American export and import firms in Buenos Ayres, American goods are handled by many commercial houses, which number about 300.

"'The principal imports into Buenos Ayres are dry goods, preserved goods, manufactured articles, oils, machinery and tools, agricultural implements, lumber, and railroad materials. Of these England furnishes 34 per cent; Germany, 15 per cent; United States, 13 per cent; Italy, 10 per cent, and France, 9 per cent.'"

The report of Consul-General George Anderson, as reported in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports, is as follows:

"Consul-General George E. Anderson, under date of December 29, furnishes the following in regard to lack of United States tonnage in the trade with Brazil:

"'For several months past there has been a notable lack of tonnage in shipping from the United States to Brazil. This state of things is not only unusual, but it reflects most significantly upon the general shipping situation between Brazil and the United States. The bulk of such trade has consisted of coffee, which has long employed many thousands of tons of shipping each year. In earlier days the flour, lard, and preserved-meat trade of the United States with Brazil offered considerable employment for this shipping on a return trip from the United States to Brazil after voyages with loads of coffee for American ports. The shipping between the two countries was profitable and prosperous. Gradually, however, the trade of the United States with Brazil in flour and provisions has declined until there is very little employment for ships on that account sailing from American for Brazilian ports. In the meanwhile American consumption of coffee has continually increased, causing a one-sided situation, with no return freight. A three-cornered trade route was then built up, vessels sailing with coffee from Brazil to an American port, thence to an European port with American products, then to Brazilian ports with European goods. This triangular route caused a further decline in America's Brazilian sales, with the decreased freight facilities for shipments of goods. Thus it has been difficult to improve steamship service between the two countries, and talk of and, perhaps the necessity for, a ship subsidy to aid American interests in this line have followed.'"

GOVERNMENT SERVICE FOR SUBSIDY GRAFTERS.

Has the Government Printing Office and the consular service been put to use to help the ship-subsidy grafters in their effort to reach into the Public Treasury for profits for a new combination of capital? A pamphlet of 44 pages has been issued from the Government Printing Office with the label "Memoranda of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on the substitute for S. 529." It is not an official document of the committee and has never been submitted to the House or to any public authority and "ordered printed." By whom it was prepared does not appear, but it is made up of a farrago of statements, quotations, and references after the exact manner of the "campaign documents" of the Merchant Marine League in support of the subsidy policy. It is not sent out in the ordinary way as an official document for the public, but is distributed privately for the evident purpose of affecting public opinion and securing support for the pending subsidy bill. Is this a legitimate use of the Government Printing Office and the resources provided for the service of the public?

Is it a mere coincidence that in the single number of the Daily Consular and Trade Reports for February 21 there appeared simultaneously in front of everything else quotations from reports from consuls at leading South American ports complaining of a lack of shipping facilities, a lack that notoriously does not exist unless "under the American flag" is to be implied, and suggesting the need of such facilities to help American trade to those ports? It certainly is not a coincidence that much more is implied in the editorial sentences introducing these quotations than can be found in the quotations themselves. For instance, on the front page the editor in Washington starts off with the statement: "Consul-General Snyder calls attention to the fact that there is practically no direct trade communication between the United States and Buenos Ayres, all American goods imported being sent by the way of England." This statement is so notoriously contrary to fact that one naturally scrutinizes the passage quoted from Mr. Snyder's report for the basis of it. No ground for it is to be found there, though Mr. Snyder does say, being thereto prompted, perhaps, from Washington, that "the chief improvement in the matter of shipping facilities between the United States and Buenos Ayres should be the establishment of a fast steamship line between the two countries." The fact is that there is regular and frequent communication with all the River Plata ports, ample for all the trade requiring them.

Consul-General Anderson is said to furnish "the following in regard to lack of United States tonnage in trade with Brazil." The "following" in this case conforms better than the other with the introductory line, but is almost equally far from the facts. It represents that the Brazilian trade is dependent upon the triangular route via Europe, and says that much of the extra tonnage employed late last year in bringing coffee here from Rio de Janeiro "has been unable to meet the present demand in American ports for tonnage for South America, particularly for Brazil." Evidence of this inability to meet the demand is not found in the American ports themselves.

Skipping over to Chile, the Washington editor of this consular information finds that Consul Winslow, at Valparaiso, reports that "the shipping facilities between the United States and Chile are not what they should be in order to develop business between the two Republics." What this consul says is that the two lines from New York "under the British flag" charge a rate that is "fair" and render a service that is "very satisfactory, considering everything." But he is prompted to add, whether by suggestion from superior authority does not appear, that "there should be one or two lines for this coast sailing under the American flag," and that "something should be done to encourage American shipping if the United States is to get the trade it should have in this part of South America." He conceals the fact that the lines "under the British flag" are owned and managed by Americans and anxious to do all they can to develop the trade, and would gladly carry the American flag if the benevolent Government did not make it impossible.

The lively editor jumps back to Montevideo, and remarks that Consul O'Hara reports that "American trade communication with Uruguay appears to be limited and insufficient." Mr. O'Hara says nothing to imply that, unless "American trade communication" means communication by American vessels, though he does say, under the prompting that seems to have gone along the South American coast with remarkable simultaneousness, that "one of the first steps to be taken in improving the commercial relations between the United States and Uruguay would be to establish a first-class steamship line between the two countries."

It is evident on the face of these publications that the Government service and the public money have been used directly in these cases, not to furnish facts and information for the public and enable it to form a fair judgment for itself, not even to serve a partisan purpose for the Administration, which would be sufficiently reprehensible, but to promote the efforts of that clique of capitalists and promoters who are hunting for subsidies from the public Treasury to give them a promise of profit in their schemes. It is a disreputable business, for which it is to be hoped the head of the Administration or any Department thereof is not responsible and which ought to be discountenanced and reprimanded.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTAUER. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 15, line 21, omit the words "in the United States;" page 15, line 22, omit "or now duly registered."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not believe the committee know what they are voting upon, and I ask the Clerk to report the amendment again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 21, omit "in the United States;" page 15, line 22, omit "or now duly registered."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the purport of this amendment is to prevent the use of any ship now built upon any of the lines proposed to be established by this bill. Now, the entire intent of this amendment is that those vessels can not be used to carry out the purposes of any of these three routes. The omission of the words "in the United States" is simply to perfect the English. The omission of the words "or now duly registered" would prevent shipping on any ship that now sails the sea on any of these lines, and gentlemen can easily understand its bearing——

Mr. KAHN. Would it affect the ships that are now the property of the Oceanic Steamship Line?

Mr. LITTAUER. It would. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, I would like, for the time being, to withdraw my amendment that I may perfect it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LITTAUER. It has been withdrawn.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I reserve the right to object, and it can not be withdrawn without unanimous consent.

Mr. LITTAUER. I am asking unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not given my consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington object?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I reserve the right to object until I have an opportunity to hear from the gentleman on the construction of his amendment.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I object to this.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What purpose does the gentleman pretend to effect by his amendment? I think it would except the ships now running in the Oceanic Line.

Mr. LITTAUER. Why the very purpose of this bill in its seventh section is to add an additional amount of subsidy for the continuation of this line, in order that it may continue. I know that there will be given two additional ships to carry on the Oceanic Line, but there is no valid reason, if the committee will continue the Oceanic Line, why three ships of 16 knots speed, meeting the very requirements of ships that have been built in the United States should not be included.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I believe I shall object to the withdrawal of this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question. If the object of this bill be to obtain transportation of mail, what difference does it make whether the mail be transported on ships already built or ships hereafter to be built?

Mr. LITTAUER. The primary object of the bill is mail transportation; one of the incidental objects is to build up the shipbuilding interest of the United States in connection with it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has answered my question, and I have elicited the information which I desired, to wit, that one of the incidental objects was to build up, at the expense of the people generally, this particular business, and the mask of this bill to transport the mail is off. [Applause.]

Mr. POLLARD. As I understand, the gentleman from New York has offered two amendments, one to line 21 and another to line 22. I want to make inquiry if the vote will be first taken on the first one that is offered?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman calls for it, it is divisible, and that demand would be in order.

Mr. POLLARD. I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will then be on the first amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 15, line 21, by striking out the words "in the United States."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the second amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would like to inquire whether I have the right to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

Mr. LITTAUER. Can not I perfect it?

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee will be in order, the Chair will endeavor to explain the situation. The committee will simply suspend business until order is restored.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on this amendment, I desire to state that if it be adopted I will offer a further amendment excepting the ships of the Oceanic Line.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We will consider that when we get to it. But I object to its being withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 22, after the words "United States," strike out the words "or now duly registered."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Division! [After a pause.] I withdraw the demand for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The request for a division is withdrawn. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I move to add after the words "United States," in line 22, the words "excepting the Sonoma, Ventura, and Sierra, of the Oceanic Line."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 22, after the words "United States," insert "excepting the Sonoma, Ventura, and Sierra, of the Oceanic Line."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order. This is an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. SULZER. I should like to have some explanation of this amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. I will be pleased to give the gentleman an explanation. The object of this amendment is——

Mr. SULZER. It seems to be to make flesh of one and fowl of the other.

Mr. LITTAUER. Are you going to do this answering? My answer to the question that you ask——

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen should refer to their colleagues in the third person.

Mr. LITTAUER. My answer to the question asked by my colleague from New York is that the object here is to except the three ships of the Oceanic Line, so that they may be continued in their present service. They are ships already under contract, for which one of the provisions of this bill provides more ample mail subsidy.

Mr. SULZER. Are not these ships that are specially excepted already in commission?

Mr. LITTAUER. They are.

Mr. SULZER. Then why except them?

Mr. LITTAUER. Because they are ships built in the United States, performing a service such as this bill seeks simply to amplify, and meet all the desirable objects to be attained from the purposes of this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. The intention is to provide for additional ships.

Mr. LITTAUER. In order to take advantage of the provisions of the bill more ships will have to be built.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to say to my colleague from New York that it seems to me to be a very strange procedure to exempt these three ships of the Oceanic Line, and not exempt two or three ships of Mr. Hill's line, such as the Dakota and Minnesota.

Mr. LITTAUER. I should like to call the attention of my colleague to the fact that they are already exempt in this bill, in another place.

Mr. SULZER. Why not exempt them all?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not believe it would be desirable. The purpose of the amendment just adopted is that all the ships that take advantage of the other provisions of this bill shall be newly built in the United States.

Mr. SULZER. These are newly built.

Mr. WANGER. Is it not the purpose of your amendment to make these three ships eligible for route No. 7?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. WANGER. Then why not offer your amendment at the other place, so that those steamships will not be withdrawn from the service in which they are now engaged and put upon route No. 1 or one of the other routes than No. 7?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not think that is a contingency which we need to provide against.

Mr. WANGER. It seems to me they need not be confined to that particular route.

Mr. KAHN. These three ships that are excepted are running on route No. 75. The ships of the Harriman line and the ships of the Hill line have never accepted a contract from the United States to carry the mail. They are not in the service of the United States to-day.

Mr. SULZER. Supposing one of them came in and accepted one of these contracts?

Mr. LITTAUER. They can not do it.

Mr. SULZER. Why not except all the Oceanic Steamship Company's vessels?

Mr. LITTAUER. Because they are already in the service, receiving a subsidy under the act of 1891.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that these ships of the Oceanic Steamship Company, which, according to the statement of the gentleman from California, are operated at a loss, are losing because they were voted to be built on a single hearing by the board of directors without sufficient examination of their design; that their construction is faulty, that it takes twice as long to load and unload them as competing merchant ships, and for that reason it is impossible for them to succeed in competition with properly constructed ships.

Mr. LITTAUER. But they do sail at 16-knot speed.

Mr. SULLIVAN. And for that reason the Government is asked to step in and pay for the blunders of the company which built them. Is that true?

Mr. LITTAUER. Not at all, as far as my information goes.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Have you inquired upon that point?

Mr. LITTAUER. All I know is that they do meet the requirements of the act of 1891, which allows a mail subsidy to 16-knot ships.

Mr. FORDNEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to speak on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to oppose the amendment?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just offered excludes from the former amendment introduced by the gentleman from New York the three ships, the Sonoma, the Ventura, and the Sierra. They are the three ships running from San Francisco to Australia under their contract under the law of 1901. That same company, the Oceanic Steamship Company, have two other ships that have a speed of 16 knots.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. LITTAUER. What are the names of the two other ships?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have not the names of the two ships here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Sibeosa, the Manchuria, and the Korea.

Mr. FORDNEY. I say the Oceanic Company has five ships to-day, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, which have a speed of 16 knots. The Pacific mail have five ships of 16 knots, and you are excluding all those ships except the three mentioned simply to give to the other side of the House a little bit of sop to get them to vote for a line from New Orleans. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen here have stated that the Oceanic Steamship Company is likely to go into the hands of a receiver unless additional aid is given at once. Let me call the attention of gentlemen that have referred to the condition of the Oceanic Steamship Company's financial condition, and ask them if they have any proof that the funds of the company have not been handled in a like manner as those of the Chicago and Alton Railroad have, as was shown by the papers this morning, by Mr. Harriman? You have not offered a scintilla of evidence as to the judicious management of the funds of that company, although that company themselves show, as I stated before, they have received from the Government in subsidies over $60,000 more than the entire cost of their labor employed on these three ships now operating from San Francisco to Australia.

Mr. WILSON. And they receive a subsidy from Australia.

Mr. FORDNEY. And receive a subsidy from Australia, the gentleman says. As I said before, what became of the money received from the freight that this company carried? They claim that they have increased our trade with Australia over $43,000,000 in the last three years. Gentlemen, this is absolutely absurd to exclude all other ships sailing under the American flag to-day, in favor of those three ships owned by what is known as the "Spreckels Line."

In the name of common sense, what good reasons do you give why these three ships should be favored and all others excluded? You are too late, my friend [Mr. LITTAUER], in discovering your error on the first amendment, and you are trying to get back to where you started from. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTAUER. Before the gentleman sits down, I understood the gentleman from Michigan to say that the subsidy now paid this line is greater than the amount paid out for wages.

Mr. FORDNEY. I say that the subsidy paid last year to that line, as shown by their own statement, is over $290,000, and by their own statement they show the cost of labor on these three ships to be $235,400.

Mr. LITTAUER. In that connection let me say that there was paid $235,000 for wages and $283,000 or $293,000 for subsidies. Now, the gentleman asks what becomes of the money paid for freight that the ships carried. Does not the gentleman know that there are other expenses in running a steamship line besides wages? Doesn't he know that the crew have to be fed, and do not the furnaces have to be fed?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; they have to be fed and they have to be clothed, and so do my wife and children, but I am not asking the Government of the United States to subsidize me for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, these matters are not so complicated that they should cause a disturbance of the peace. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York was to get rid in this bill of the cry that the gentleman from Michigan and others have been making that we were subsidizing the Hill and Harriman lines. It had been shown how enormously rich these two lines were, and it was thought that in building new American ships it might be well to exclude from the operation of this subsidy any ships that are now built—that is, exclude them from what?

Why, exclude them from making contracts to carry the mail? That is all. Now, in the case of the Oceanic Line, it turns out that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] did not know—or he would not have made this impassioned speech—the Government has a contract with that line to continue to carry the mail for seven years more. Now, then, let us look at it. The Government made this contract with the Spreckels Line, if you please, to carry this mail for ten years, and three years of it have expired. During those three years they have constructed three fast ships, at a cost of nearly two million and three-quarters. Would it not be beautiful—and I would like to have the gentleman from Michigan answer this question—would it not be a plain violation of the contract of the Government with the Spreckels Line to now come in here and say that those three ships that they built under the contract, complying with the contract, should not carry the mail under the contract that the Government itself has made with the Spreckels line? That is the condition we are in.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I will not yield.

Mr. FORDNEY. I thought the gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman did not seem to know that we had a contract running seven years with the Spreckels Line to continue to carry the mails.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, I know it as well as the gentleman does.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I will ask the gentleman a question. Would you come in here with an act of Congress and destroy the instrumentalities which that contract was being complied with?

Mr. FORDNEY. That company entered into a solemn contract to do a certain thing, and when you enter into a contract with me you expect me to carry it out to the letter of the law, but the gentleman's bill now proposes to increase that amount to be paid them under their contract $200,000 beyond the amount they agreed to carry the mail for. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, certainly. Is there any doubt about that? It has been done a thousand times; it will be done a thousand times, when the gentleman from Michigan and myself are forgotten.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Suppose that the Government discovered that that steamship company was making a profit of $200,000 above a reasonable amount; would it be reasonable for the Government to come and ask them to pay it back under the contract?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no such conditions exist.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no; but the shoe is now on the other foot.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is so easy to get up and make declaratory statements of facts that are not facts. Imagination runs riot here—pure imagination. We know that the ships of the Oriental Line have been offered in the market for sale.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. Chairman, I would not attempt a speech upon this occasion did I not deeply feel the responsibility that should rest upon every Member of this House. This measure, in my judgment, is the culmination of the evils of protection. It is the beginning of a governmental policy of paternalistic greed hitherto unknown, and which is unwarranted either by the letter or the spirit of the Constitution. It is boldly proposed to tax all the people from thirty to sixty millions of dollars within the next decade to swell the fortunes of less than a dozen millionaire shipowners. Republican graft and robbery have been presented in many hideous forms, but this is the climax of political debauchery. If the great masses of the people could fully understand and appreciate the full effect of this measure, there would be a revolution of public sentiment such as was never known before. Or if they understood the clandestine and tyrannical methods adopted to rush this measure through this House—giving in the closing hours of the session only five hours for the discussion of a policy carrying millions of dollars—they would sweep the party in power into oblivion at the very next turn of the political wheel.

No one not blinded by avarice or stupefied by that imbecility resulting from long political wrongs can contemplate this measure without misgivings of its virtue. Those who believe in equal rights to all and special privileges to none will condemn it, and likewise will be the verdict of the toiling millions, who believe it is nothing less than robbery to take the fruit of one man's toil and give it to another. It is condemned by all political philosophy. No class of statesmen, save those now swaying the rod of empire, ever dared such a usurpation. The teachings of Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, as well as all other American statesmen who have had the welfare of the American people at heart, are diametrically opposed to such a policy. The greatest jurists of the country have written its condemnation in letters of gold. Judge Cooley wrote:

> However important it may be to the community that individual citizens should prosper in their industrial enterprises, it is not the business of government to aid them with its means. Enlightened states leave every man to depend for his success and prosperity in business on his own exertions. * * * It may therefore be safely asserted that taxation for the purpose of raising money from the public to be given or even loaned to private parties in order that they may use it in their individual business enterprises is not recognized as a public use. In contemplation of law it would be taking the common property of the whole community and handing it over to private parties for their private gain, and consequently unlawful.

The Supreme Court, in the case of the Loan Association v. Topeka (20 Wallace), speaking along this line, said:

> The power to tax is, therefore, the strongest, the most pervading of all the powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. * * * This power can as readily be employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another, so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other, if there is no implied limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised. To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen and with the other to bestow it on favored individuals to aid private enterprise and build up private fortunes is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation.

It will be remembered that when this measure came from the Senate it had all the brands and earmarks of an outright ship-subsidy bill, but its friends, in order to hoodwink the public and to deceive the rebellious members of the dominant party, have changed the dress of the monster by giving it the appearance of necessary ocean mail legislation. To further intensify this deception the chairman of the committee says:

> It can not be too strongly emphasized that all that is proposed in this present bill is to apply the well-established policy of the United States to ocean routes not reached in a satisfactory way by existing ocean mail legislation.

Now, to the unwary this seems very plausible. Indeed, all will admit that in this day of commercial expansion our ocean mail facilities should be extended in keeping with the ever-growing commerce of the world; but while on the surface this measure purports to be legislation in behalf of our ocean mails, underlying it are to be found all the hideous provisions of an outright ship-subsidy bill.

The amount appropriated per annum may appear, when compared with the naval or pension appropriation, insignificant to some, but all such should remember that it is to be a continuing subsidy and will, in the fixed period of ten years, amount to perhaps $60,000,000. And also, they should remember that it is the initiation of a permanent system of graft that will increase as the years come and go. From the few millions per annum at present it will grow into tens and even hundreds of millions in the near future. When we embarked upon our present Philippine policy no one thought that in less than a decade it would have cost approximately $700,000,000, nor did anyone believe forty years ago that the small amount then appropriated for pensions would ever have grown to $150,000,000 per annum; nor that when the Government undertook to provide for the rivers and harbors that that appropriation would ever have been increased to the enormous sum of $90,000,000 now carried by the bill recently passed. So it must be apparent to everyone that this measure, bearing upon its face a modest sum and apparently for legitimate purposes, will some day grow to be a monster of iniquity to scourge our children.

But just here let me say a word to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] who, in response to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], intimated that the representatives of the cornfield in this body were incapacitated to pass upon the merits of this question. In this he may be partially correct. But he should remember that behind these cornfield statesmen is an honest yeomanry, earning their bread in the sweat of their faces, and that with them forbearance has almost ceased to be a virtue; that one of these days they will rise in their might and cause his political kith and kin to cry for the mountains to fall upon them and hide their iniquity. That statesman is either blinded by ignorance or pompadored by vanity who fails to reckon with the rights of the farmer in his legislative deliberation. They are, indeed, the salt of the earth and contribute more of the taxation for the support of the Government than any other class of American citizens. They have been taxed in season and out of season.

They have never reaped any substantial benefits from any policy inaugurated by the party in power. In truth, every act of the Republican party has been diametrically opposed to their well-being. It has made it possible for the trusts to rob them of the greater part of their earnings and has isolated their products from the markets of the world; yet in spite of this they have prospered. God has given them energy, intelligence, and fertile fields from which, together with unremitting toil, they are enabled to reap the fruits of many rich harvests. They are the coming factors in American politics, and many who now scorn them will live to tremble at their power.

Mr. Chairman, there is another proposition involved in this bill, and that is the entire appropriation will be gobbled up by the steamship lines now in operation. These lines belong to the owners of the Northern Pacific, the Southern Pacific, the Standard Oil Company, and a few other railroad companies. According to Lloyd's Register the Standard Oil Company owns sixteen ships engaged in international commerce. The Great Northern Railroad, owned by Mr. Hill, owns a large number of steamers plying between Seattle and Hongkong, and the Southern Pacific, or Mr. Harriman, owns quite a number operating between New Orleans and the West Indies. These are the real beneficiaries under this bill. It is for them and not the public that this measure is being railroaded through Congress.

But it is contended that the owners of these ships can not share in this bounty because their ships do not make the required time of 16 knots per hour. This argument is puerile. How long would it take them to convert their slow-going vessels into vessels making the required 16 knots per hour; or how long would it take them to add one or more vessels to their present number, and thereby reap the full amount of this appropriation?

It is said by the friends of this measure that it is intended to provide adequate mail facilities to South America and the Orient, and it proposes to give the shipowners a subsidy of hundreds of thousands of dollars to make from twelve to twenty-four trips per year over each of the mail lines mentioned, and that this is to continue for a period of ten years. And to one of the lines from the Atlantic seaboard to Argentina it is proposed to give $800,000 annually to carry the mail bimonthly, or $33,333 for each trip. Practically a similar rate of pay is provided for all the other lines mentioned in the bill. In the period of ten years Rockefeller, Harriman, Hill and company will receive $8,000,000 on the line from New York to Argentina, and on all the lines provided for in the bill they will practically receive $60,000,000—a sufficiency not only to provide the few mail steamers required, but will equip for themselves a great commercial fleet. This is, indeed, a handsome present that our Republican friends propose to make these multi-millionaires out of the earnings of millions of our hard-pressed people.

Then, too, Mr. Chairman, the test required by this bill to determine whether or not the ship makes 16 knots per hour is a fraud upon its face. The bill says—

> That the requirements of this section as to the rates of speed shall be deemed to be complied with if said rates are developed during a trial of four hours' continuous steaming at sea in ordinary weather in water of sufficient depth to make the test a fair and just one.

This provision virtually means that in a calm sea and on a quiet day in the presence of the naval officers there shall be a test made, and any ship that can then and there make 16 knots per hour for four hours will be entitled to a share of this appropriation. One must be silly indeed not to see the fallacy of this provision. If the friends of this measure were dealing honestly with the American public they would provide a system of deduction for every ship that did not make passage from point to point as required at the rate of 16 knots per hour. The railway mail service is required to make the scheduled time or they suffer a deduction from their pay, and why should not mail ships be controlled by the same rule? It does seem that if the necessity for the transmission of mails between this country and the point mentioned in the bill were so eminent and urgent as to necessitate this rape upon the Treasury that it would be a far better policy for the Government to press into service some of our fast-going cruisers that are now rusting, in the time of peace, at the various naval stations of the country.

Mr. Chairman, all the wealth of the Treasury voted into the pockets of the millionaire shipbuilders of America would never replace our lost merchant marine. Ships are built to carry commerce, and without it there can be no merchant marine. Commerce between nations, as between individuals, is created by reciprocal trade benefits. As long as England and Germany make concessions for the South American trade not made by the United States they will dominate and control that trade. In other words, so long as their markets are thrown practically open for all the products of the South American republics, while our doors are locked and barred by protection, they will continue to be masters of that fruitful field of commerce. Nor will the multiplied millions to be spent on the Panama Canal or in fostering this infamous subsidy policy ever change our humiliating commercial exclusion from the markets of our sister republics.

At the close of the Boxer trouble in China, when Russia, Germany, and other nations of Europe wanted to dismember that Empire, President McKinley boldly championed the cause of maintaining the integrity of China and equal trade privileges to all nations. He not only saved the tottering throne of China, but saved us our richest foreign market. Since that remarkable event our cotton-goods trade alone has grown from practically nothing to many millions of dollars, as is shown by the following from the Department of Commerce and Labor:

In manufactured cottons China is by far our largest customer. The total value of all cotton manufactures exported in the fiscal year 1906 was, as above indicated, $53,000,000, in round terms, of which about thirty millions went to China. Practically all of the cotton goods sent to China were in the form of cloth, the total value of cotton cloths exported to China in the year being $29,641,188, and of other cotton goods $172,887. The exports of cotton cloths to China in the fiscal year 1906 exceeded, both in quantity and value, that of any other earlier year, the value in 1906 being about $2,000,000 greater than in 1905, and the number of yards about 24,000,000 greater than in 1905. China's rank as a purchaser of American cottons is indicated by the fact that of the 711,000,000 yards of cotton cloths exported in 1906, 498,000,000 went to China, while about 133,000,000 yards went to the American countries south of the United States and 25,000,000 to Asia other than China and Oceania.

Would that a few rays of McKinley's wisdom could pierce the brains of the latter-day rulers of his party.

We admire the dashing, wild courage of the powerful man in the White House. We believe that in many respects he is a great President, but we must be permitted to question his wisdom or sincerity in his advocacy of this ship-subsidy measure as well as in his attempted prosecution of the trusts. It does seem that instead of throwing the power of the Executive behind this measure under the guise and pretense of replacing our foreign commerce that he would come to the front and advocate a policy that would open the doors of this country to the markets of South America and the Orient. Such an act on his part would do far more to replace our merchant marine and to reinstate our lost commerce than the expenditure of a hundred millions for ship subsidies.

What assurance does he give this House or the country that our trade will be increased a single dollar when he shall have secured the passage of this, his pet measure, and shall have placed his subsidized mail steamers on the bosom of the ocean? How can he expect to drive England and Germany, the masters of the South American commerce, from that field so long as those people are not permitted to bring their products into our country without paying at least 25 per cent of their value for the privilege of entering, while at the same time they can send them elsewhere free of cost? The President may in some respects be a great man, but he is twenty years behind the masters of his own party. Blaine and others thirty years ago looked across the coming years and prophesied the present conditions in our foreign commerce. Only a few days ago our great Mr. Root waked up from his Rip Van Winkle nap and uttered sentiments in reference to the importance of our commerce with South America which are precisely the same as those given to the world by Blaine thirty-odd years ago.

Why have they slept all these years? Why is it that they now not only want to pass this infamous measure, but they dare to go so far as to favor a maximum and minimum tariff, which we prefer to the system of taxation now in vogue? But this is only another attempt to blind the public. This advanced step has been taken for no other purpose than to appease the wrath of the outraged millions whose products are rotting in the fields and factories for the want of the rich markets of the world long since closed to them by protection.

Mr. Chairman, wherein arises the necessity for this useless expenditure of the people's money? Our foreign commerce has never suffered a day for the want of transportation facilities. Other nations with their ships are ready to handle the small amount of trade we have with the countries mentioned in this bill at much less cost than is proposed by this measure. We propose to donate money enough to build the ships of private citizens and then send them upon the high seas to charge the same freight rates as are now charged by foreign competitors. In other words, this is another tax placed upon the foreign commerce of the nation—on the cotton, the wheat, and other products shipped abroad.

At the last session the Republicans vied with the Democrats in their efforts for railroad rate legislation, and when the Hepburn bill passed they loudly blew their trumpets in the willing ears of the farmer and other shippers who are being robbed by unjust railroad rates, yet in less than one year from that time they come forth with this measure and propose to make the same classes pay an extra tax of several millions per annum for the privilege of shipping their products abroad. What manner of statesmen compose this party? Has consistency ceased to live within its ranks? Just here let me say that if the party in power desires to really free the people from the burdens resulting from the want of adequate transportation facilities, why does it not do something to relieve the situation on land instead of embarking upon the high seas? Almost every industry is suffering for the want of interstate transportation, the farmers' cotton as well as the manufacturers of lumber, and a great many other industrial enterprises are suffering serious losses for the want of additional cars and railroad trackage. The wheels of commerce are being clogged by the inability of the railroads to handle our increasing freight. New roads should be constructed. Those now built should be double tracked and the rolling stock should be largely increased. Along this line some real good can be done for the people. Why not pass a law compelling the railroads to provide adequate transportation facilities for the commerce of the country? Why not make it possible for them to construct and equip their lines at much less than the present cost by destroying the steel trust, by removing the duty on iron and steel? Next to labor, steel and iron enter more largely into railroad construction and equipment than any other item of cost. Railroads are the largest consumers of iron and steel. The construction of a mile of single-track railway requires 141 tons of rails, weighing 80 pounds to the yard.

Ten years ago these could have been bought for $17.40 per ton, or $2,491.75 per mile. The present price is from $28 to $30 per ton, or from $3,948 to $4,230 per mile. Prices of joints, bolts, spikes, and all other steel used in track construction have gone up in proportion. There is on an average one locomotive for each 4.5 miles of railway line. Ten years ago the average locomotive cost about $12,000. To-day the average cost is from $16,000 to $20,000. Making an allowance for the increase in size, there is an advance of from $4,000 to $5,000 on each locomotive, due entirely to the advance in the price of steel made by the steel trust behind the sheltering wall of the Dingley tariff. This amounts to an increase of about $1,000 per mile in the cost of equipping a railroad. There is one passenger coach for each 5.3 miles of line. The cost per coach has increased about $3,000, or $566 per mile, due to the advance in prices of steel and lumber. There are 8.3 freight and company cars, built of steel and wood, per mile of line, costing an average of fully $450 more per car, or $3,735 per mile, than ten years ago, making due allowance for the increase in the size of cars.

This marvelous increase in the price of steel is due to the steel trust that is barricaded behind the Dingley tariff law, and it is doing more to retard the industrial development of the country than any other cause. It is an additional tax upon the shippers, not only those of the present time, but those yet to be born. The railroads are constructed by interest-bearing bonds sold upon the markets of the country and which are never paid. The interest thereon becomes a perpetual charge upon the products to be transported. You should not believe for one moment that any part of this extra burden is assumed by the railroads. It is always shifted by them on the people.

But, before returning to my subject, let me conjure my Republican friends to free the people from the clutches of the trusts and railroads before thrusting upon them this ship-subsidy burden.

But it is contended that other nations subsidize their merchant marine and that thereby they have become the commercial mistresses of the world; that means they have appropriated unto themselves the commerce of the world. England, the greatest commercial power on the face of the globe, has acquired her wonderful domination of the world by her open-door policy, and Germany, while a protective nation, has appropriated unto herself the commerce of many of the richest countries of the world by suspending and modifying her tariff policy whenever it interferes with her commercial power.

It takes more than a subsidized merchant marine to make commerce. We annually pay for carrying our ocean mail about $3,000,000, and no one can say that it has increased our foreign trade. We have paid hundreds of thousands of dollars annually for sending the mail from San Francisco to Australia, yet our commerce with that country is frightfully insignificant. Germany pays scarcely more than the United States for her ocean mail service, though her commerce is expanding tenfold more rapidly than ours. The same is true with England; while there is France, with her heavily subsidized merchant marine, making less progress in this regard than any other first-class nation. Let me here read an interesting article from the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin about foreign subsidies and their effect upon commerce, since we have heard so much in this debate about the liberal ship-subsidy policy of England, Germany, and France:

The letter from Hamburg which we published yesterday showed conclusively what has been shown many times before, that German shipping owes absolutely nothing to Government subsidies. The only subsidies paid are moderate ones for a mail service to China, Japan, Australia, and the German colonies of Africa, and those have produced little, if any, effect upon trade with those countries and none whatever upon the development of German shipping. Those particular lines of service are not profitable, and the Hamburg-American, the most successful of all German companies, gave it up after a brief trial. We know very well what has not built up German shipping, and now it is more important to know what has done it.

The most important influence is its freedom. German shipowners are free to buy their vessels where they can get them to the best advantage, and German shipbuilders get their materials free of duty. For some years after this policy was adopted the vessels were mostly built in British shipyards, but German capitalists had the enterprise to enter into competition with them, and beginning with repairs and the less important vessels they have built up an industry that vies with that of Great Britain, and first-class steamers are now built in German yards. It is the fruit of energy, skill, and free competition. It is sometimes said that German shipping is favored by lower rates on the Government railroads for commodities intended for export than upon those for domestic markets. The trade upon which it thrives may be favored in that way, but the same discrimination in favor of both exports and imports is shown by railroads in this country. That explains nothing as to the development of shipping.

The most potent influence has been a scientific study of the subject and an unremitting application of enterprise, skill, and managing ability in the shipping trade and in shipbuilding. But a fundamental difference between the conditions in both Germany and Great Britain and those in this country is to be considered as the decisive factor. Owing to the natural resources and relatively undeveloped industrial condition of this country both capital and labor find more profitable fields in internal development and activity. It is that condition that explains the higher wages of labor and the larger profits of capital. In Germany, with a smaller area than Texas and a population equal to more than two-thirds of that of the United States, there is a competition which makes wages, prices, and profits lower, and energy and capital feel the need of extending their energies outside of the borders of the country. There they must compete with others, and this they are able to do by their capacity for the necessary effort and not by the help of the Government at the expense of the people whose work is on shore. In prosecuting their industry on the seas they are ready to do carrying for all nations and to and from all ports at a less cost than that at which it could be done by American capital and labor. That is why they do it and why we let them do it; why, in fact, it is to our advantage to have them do it. There is no need of subsidies to explain the building up of either German or British shipping.

On a former occasion I stated on this floor that the greatest evil following in the wake of protection is the fact that it closed to our increasing products the fruitful markets of the world, and that if we were only permitted to feed and clothe the hungry and naked of the earth we would never be otherwise than prosperous, and since hearing the great debate on this subsidy measure I am more thoroughly convinced of the correctness of my position. It has been conclusively demonstrated that the cotton, corn, and wheat products of the South and West, as well as the manufactures of every section, have so far outstripped home consumption as to produce an alarming condition. These products are in the warehouses decaying for the want of markets. This is a dreadful state of affairs, indeed, and will ultimately result in closing our factories, driving the plowshare from the fields, and turning upon the country an army of begging laborers who now live upon the earnings of their daily toil. It will soon sweep away the wealth of the rich in a panic and bring untold misery to the poor. [Applause.]

In the face of this impending calamity, why not unlock our barred doors to the world, in order to induce the world to consume our great surplus, and thereby make our prosperity as enduring as time itself. Our crops never fail; we can feed and clothe the world and can furnish the machinery for her every industrial enterprise. Yet, in the face of all this, we are "standing pat" by a policy that is intended for no other purpose than to enrich the already rich. The rights of 80,000,000 people, as well as the commercial destiny of the nation, is being sacrificed at the throne of avarice. Can it be that this policy will never change? Will the people never be aroused to the full appreciation of the iniquities of Dingleyism? Will they always be blinded by such paltry subterfuges as this ship-subsidy fraud. May God forbid!

Much success hath made our Republican friends mad, or they would not have attempted this rape upon the rights of the people. Long-continued success has sharpened their avarice to such an extent that they will dare the most grievous political crime with the apparent innocence of an unsuspecting child. Like the wild Indian hunter of the Andes, who scales the dangerous cliffs and walks upon the brink of the gaping abyss, unconscious of the impending danger, they are boldly rifling the pockets of the masses to swell the coffers of the classes, little realizing how dangerously near they are approaching the pitfall of political destruction.

Sir, your party has committed many political crimes—you have given the public domain to the railroad corporations; you have subsidized the coal trust with all the coal fields of the people; your vassals have robbed the Treasury of the nation; you have debauched the electorate to acquire the Chief Magistry of the nation—all of which the people have borne with patriotic patience; but on to-morrow, when your votes are registered in favor of this infamous ship-subsidy steal, you will have sinned against the Holy Ghost and there will be naught left for you to do but to "fold your tents and steal silently away." [Loud applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] wants to offer an amendment in the line of his argument he would offer an amendment not in keeping with that offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER], but an amendment that "nothing in this bill should affect any contract now existing between the United States Government and any line of steamships." The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is to pay this contracting line $200,000 more than the present contract calls for. If this attempt be based upon the ground that these vessels of this line are 16-knot ships and up-to-date, the reply is that the Siberia and the Manchuria and the Korea in another line are better ships—infinitely better and faster. If the object be to exempt ships on account of their merits as transportation agencies, those latter ships would be the ones to be excepted; but the object of this amendment is neither what was stated by the gentleman from New York nor what was stated by the gentleman from Ohio.

Whatever its object may be, its effect will be, if adopted, simply to prevent any other line offering to do the work cheaper from getting the work to be done and to forestall in advance the chances of other would-be contracting parties, and to fix it so that the only existing ships upon the Pacific coast that can receive the benefit of the payments under this bill are these three ships mentioned in the amendment. Now, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] really wants to exempt these ships because they now have a contract with the Government and want to be able to carry out that contract, the proper form of the amendment is, as I say, to provide that nothing in this bill shall affect that contract, referring to it specifically in sufficiently specific terms.

Mr. Chairman, one other word. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has just sent a sharp dagger to the very heart of the iniquity and the pretense of this legislation. The pretense of this legislation is to take the money out of the Treasury for the purpose of making up the difference between American sailors' and ship employees' wages and salaries and those paid to foreigners, and the gentleman from Michigan has demonstrated that in the case of this particular line the subsidy already granted absolutely exceeds not only the difference between the wages on these and other ships, if any difference exists, but the entire wage and salary bill of the line.

The gentleman from Michigan produced figures——

Mr. KAHN rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from California can not shake his gory locks at me with the result of putting Banquo down. He must first down the figures furnished by the gentleman from Michigan, and such is my confidence in the gentleman from Michigan that I know he can not do it.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Michigan, as I understood it, simply referred to the wages paid on the ships. Is that the total expense of running a line of steamers?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nor did I state it was. I stated that it was greater than the wages, not greater than all the expenses. The gentleman from California seems to want a subsidy equal to all the expenses of owning and operating a ship line.

Mr. KAHN. You said the wages; that is not nearly all. Now, a word as to the two steamers the gentleman from Michigan spoke of. They are the Mariposa and Alameda. They are 3,000-ton ships. They could not begin to enter this particular service, because they could not make the time. They have not the coal capacity. They can not carry the coal that is required to make the time, and they never have been able to make 16 knots heretofore, and they could not be used for this purpose.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. Is it true the very ships you have mentioned were running from Australia to San Francisco before this contract?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; they made 13 trips a year, and the present ships make 17 trips.

Mr. FORDNEY. That cuts no figure.

Mr. KAHN. It does cut a figure, because the Mariposa and the Alameda could not make 17 trips per year.

Mr. FORDNEY. They were good enough to run there——.

Mr. KAHN. And they made money while they were running. The Oceanic Steamship Company then took this contract, and it has not been able to make a dollar since. In fact, it has lost money constantly ever since then. Now, I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that Congress repeatedly has come to the assistance of contractors with the Government where under unforeseen conditions the amount allowed under the contract was found insufficient. Take the case of the Baltimore fire. There was a contractor there who, by reason of that fire, could not meet the conditions of his contract, and then the Government came to his aid and allowed him considerably more than his original contract price in order that he might be able to complete the contract. I merely cite that as an instance.

The gentleman from Michigan has stated that possibly there was some juggling in the management of this company's affairs, so as to make it appear it was insolvent. I resent the imputation. Any man in the State of California who owns a single share in that company—and the stock is worth only $2 a share—can demand a full investigation of the entire management of the Oceanic Line. They can easily determine whether there is crookedness or manipulation or juggling. On the contrary, I believe that the line has been well managed. It has given a good service to the country, but it has been constantly running behind. It has lost money hand over fist. It owes $2,000,000 over and above its bond issue and its stock issue——

Mr. WILSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I only have a moment or two, but I will yield.

Mr. WILSON. I just wanted to ask the gentleman a question. Is this same line now receiving a subsidy from any other foreign country?

Mr. KAHN. Yes, sir; it is receiving $75,000 from New Zealand, where prior to the time it built these ships it was receiving $118,025 a year from the same country for thirteen voyages a year. If it had been paid in the same proportion for seventeen voyages, the company would have received $154,333 a year as a subsidy; instead of that the New Zealand Government, the moment the company put on these American ships, cut the subsidy down to $75,000. In brief, the company is now being paid less subsidy for a greatly improved service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 108.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KAHN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 127.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 21, after the word "steamships," insert the words "of the highest American rating known to maritime commerce."

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, in advocacy of the amendment I desire to say, first, that the highest rating known to maritime commerce, as provided in section 4 of the ocean-mail act of March 3, 1891, does not carry out the intention of the proposed amendment in its benefits to American shipping unless the words "American rating" are added, to exclude foreign ratings, especially in the case of Lloyds, which is largely interested in the merchant marine of Great Britain; second, the last paragraph of section 10 of the proposed amendment, providing that "all ordinary repairs or overhauling, etc., shall be made in the United States," would imply American inspection and rating, which condition should also apply to new vessels by the words "American rating;" third, the conversion of vessels into auxiliary cruisers—as mentioned in section 4 of the mail act of March 3, 1891—according to plans to be agreed upon by owners and the Secretary of the Navy, if rated by a foreign society would give that society the privilege of inspection of such conversion.

I therefore trust that the amendment may be adopted, as I believe it to be necessary to perfect that section and give a proper and efficient rating.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is simply to add the words "of the highest American rating known to maritime commerce." It makes it so that our vessels shall be inspected by our own inspectors and not by foreigners. I believe that the amendment is a good one and I hope the gentleman on the other side will accept it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not rise to oppose the amendment, but I would like to have the gentleman tell the committee what the difference is in the highest rating of the Lloyds standard and that which the gentleman now proposes to put into this bill.

Mr. GOULDEN. I will simply give the third reason that I gave a few moments ago when the gentleman was otherwise engaged.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was not otherwise engaged.

Mr. GOULDEN. To repeat, the arguments for this are in brief as follows:

First. The highest rating known to maritime commerce, as provided in section 4 of the ocean-mail act of March 3, 1891, does not carry out the intention of the proposed amendment in its benefits to American shipping unless the words "American rating" are added, to exclude foreign ratings, especially in the case of Lloyds, which is largely interested in the merchant marine of Great Britain.

Second. The last paragraph of section 10 of the proposed amendment providing that "All ordinary repairs or overhauling, etc., shall be made in the United States," would imply American inspection and rating, which condition should also apply to new vessels by the words "American rating."

Third. The conversion of vessels into auxiliary cruisers (as amended in section 4 of the mail act of March 3, 1891), according to plans to be agreed upon by owners and the Secretary of the Navy, if rated with a foreign society would give that society the privilege of inspection of such conversion.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GOULDEN. Certainly.

Mr. LITTAUER. The gentleman stated certain matters in relation to the rating. On what authority does he state those as facts?

Mr. GOULDEN. Under the mail act of March 3, 1891, you will find that that is provided for in that act.

Mr. LITTAUER. I appreciate that; but you said that there are certain changes following that. Has not that act worked well in connection with such ships as have taken advantage of it?

Mr. GOULDEN. Not satisfactory; and I think we ought to guard against foreign societies and inspectors who have the privilege of inspecting anything we might convert.

Mr. LITTAUER. Was there any such experience during the Spanish war?

Mr. GOULDEN. I think there was. I can see no harm to the amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not know that there is any harm in it.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is a good American amendment, and every American should approve of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. You would have two standards of insurance. If you wanted to insure in a British company you would have no standard except the Lloyds standard. If you wanted to insure in an American company, you could not insure under the Lloyds standard. What is the use, unless the gentleman can state that our standard, if we have one—and I do not know that we have—is better than the old standard or is higher or lower or cheaper—some reason besides the mere name?

Mr. GOULDEN. I think our standard is higher, or should be, than the Lloyds standard.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then it would defeat insurance in any of these companies of any other country in the world.

Mr. GOULDEN. No; not necessarily, and aside from that I think we have enough American companies to attend to the business. I would always favor American institutions; and believing this amendment to be along that line, I have introduced it. It is of no personal interest to me, and the committee can do as they see fit with the proposition.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This seems to be in the interest of American ship insurance companies.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is in the interest of American institutions and in behalf of the American flag, that we are talking about so much.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. GOULDEN. It has been suggested, Mr. Chairman, that I strike out the word "American."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. You can not take it out while the vote is being taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York can not do that. If he withdraws the call for the division——

Mr. GOULDEN. I insist on the call for the division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count, then.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 61, noes 94.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 4, after the word "prescribe," add "Provided, That no money shall be paid under the provisions of this act to, for, or on account of any vessel operated or owned in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, by or for or in connection with any railroad, railroad corporation, company, or system."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, we could not hear that amendment, and I ask that it be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise for the purpose of considering a conference report.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 529 and had come to no resolution thereon.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 28, 1907.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 8556) to authorize the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of Florida, to construct a bridge over the Escambia River between the counties of Santa Rosa and Escambia, in the State of Florida.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following conference report, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents the conference report on the Army appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: On amendment numbered 25 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
J. B. FORAKER,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read as follows:

STATEMENT.

Conferees report a disagreement on amendment No. 25, which provides for promoting paymasters' clerks to first lieutenancies in the Army and placing them on the retired list after thirty-five years of service.

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], temporarily absent from the Chamber for some reason, I know not what, also agrees with us in this statement, and I want to state to the House that we have had conference after conference in this matter, and we are met with the proposition that the Senate will not recede from its amendment unless the House will agree with an amendment. The provision in the Senate amendment is that any paymaster's clerk who had served thirty-five years in that position should, on reaching that length of service, be commissioned as first lieutenant in the Regular Army and placed upon the retired list with the rank, pay, and allowances of that grade. The House conferees did not believe that upon an Army appropriation bill, or any appropriation bill, civilian employees of the Government should be taken and commissioned in the Army and placed upon the retired list. The House conferees believe that if this Congress or any future Congress desired to deal with the question of a civilian retired list, it ought to be independent of the Army and where all the clerks of all the Departments would be upon an exact equality; so they could not agree to the Senate provision. The Senate conferees did finally agree that if we were willing to adopt this amendment, which I will read to the House, they would agree to this as a change of the language of their amendment:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint E. Russell Mears, now a paymaster's clerk in the Army, who has rendered thirty-eight years' faithful service as such, a first lieutenant, mounted, United States Army, and to place him on the retired list thereof as of that rank.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that to me this would be a vast improvement on the other provision; but on that subject my judgment is the same as that of the other House conferees—that it is not right to take a civilian employee of the Government who had not had Army service and place him, as an officer of the Army, on retired pay for life when he reaches the age of 64 years or after thirty-eight years of service as a civilian employee. Unless some one desires to make a motion or to be heard on the subject——

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand this last proposition is to take a certain civilian clerk, by name, and make him a lieutenant, for the purpose of putting him on the retired list, or, in other words, giving him a pension.

Mr. HULL. No; it is not a pension.

Mr. PAYNE. It amounts to that.

Mr. HULL. It will be more than that.

Mr. PAYNE. It amounts to a large pension, does it not?

Mr. HULL. To an annuity, in the form of retired pay of an officer of the Army.

Mr. PAYNE. An annuity. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed——

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not willing for one to yield to any such proposition. It can not be that any legislative branch in this country will hold up a great appropriation bill in an attempt to compel the coordinate legislative branch of the Government to surrender and agree to an annuity to a certain individual, I do not care who that individual may be. For one, I do not propose to be coerced into any such position as that. [Applause.]

If it is in order, I should like to move that the House adhere to its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. HULL. I propose to make that motion myself in the event of no one presenting any other motion of higher privilege.

Mr. PAYNE. And not ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. I will.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman's committee has recently reported adversely a bill to place one Daniel Robertson, practically as a second lieutenant in the Army, upon the retired list, after fifty years of service as a hospital steward, or something of that sort.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman right there that personally I believe he ought to be placed on the retired list with the grade of second lieutenant, but the Committee on Military Affairs thought otherwise. Robertson goes on the retired list under law now.

Mr. MANN. The policy of the committee in that case will undoubtedly be adhered to by the House, and that policy is to refuse to place this man, who has been in active service, upon the retired list. So I hope the gentleman will see that a civilian employee is not given any better treatment than this man, who has served for fifty years.

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the gentleman that as far as the conferees are concerned the House must take it out of our hands in order to place clerks on the retired list of the Army.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. I do not want five minutes. I simply want to say that I thoroughly agree with the position of the gentleman from Iowa and that I am unalterably opposed, and I believe this side of the House is unalterably opposed, to beginning a system which means a civil-pension list. [Applause.] That is what this means, and that is all I want to say.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman desires to speak, I move that the House adhere to its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 25. There is nothing to adopt.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House do adhere to its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 25.

Mr. HULL. And I call for a division, so that we may have a rising vote.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 241, noes none.

The result of the vote was received with applause.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that when the House adheres to its disagreement to an amendment there is no necessity for any further conference?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. HULL. I do not ask any.

The SPEAKER. The action of the House would seem to exclude a conference.

HOMER QUICK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 22210) to correct the military record of Homer Quick, with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. CAPRON. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MONROE STREET NE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10703) authorizing the extension of Monroe street NE., with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

METROPOLITAN POLICE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 25630) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," approved June 8, 1906, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of J. R. Harris, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.

MERCHANT MARINE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will resume its session.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the merchant marine bill, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I wish briefly to explain the object of this amendment. It has been frequently charged on the floor of the House that the object of this bill was largely to grant a subsidy to Mr. Hill and Mr. Harriman. We have already adopted an amendment that excludes any but American ships hereafter built, and I want now to have this amendment made so that it will be impossible not only to use the ships that Hill and Harriman and other railway corporations now have, but such as may hereafter be built to run in connection with railroads.

I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in what he said a while ago, that it did not make any difference what ships carried our mail so long as they performed the service. But there seems to be in this House, among certain Members, an idea that if this bill is passed it will inure to certain corporations, and what I desire to do is to make it impossible for that thing to happen, in order that when we come to the Pacific lines we may be able to keep a few ships on that ocean, at least, to run to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington if he does not think his amendment goes farther than that? Does he not think that it would preclude railroad corporations and shipping corporations from making a contract for freight—say from Chicago to Yokohama—over the two lines when he cuts off all connection and business relations between railroad corporations and shipowners?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not think the amendment goes that far. If the railways shipped freight to San Francisco and an independent ship, owned by an independent company, received it, I do not believe that such ship would be a ship operating for the railroad within the meaning of the proposed amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. No; but they make a freight rate from Chicago through to Yokohama, and any amendment that would cut that off ought to be avoided. It is for the interest of commerce, the interest of the country that that thing should be continued. I think the gentleman's amendment cuts it off. It goes too far. I think enough has been done already to cut off these companies and all fear and apprehension on the part of any Member of the House; and I think that there can be no question about the construction of the bill under the amendments that have been made. I am afraid that the amendment of the gentleman from Washington goes so far as to cut off that class of contracts which ought to be encouraged.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I had no desire to do that. I gave the most careful consideration to this amendment. I don't think it is open to the objection that the gentleman from New York makes. I did not intend to restrict through freight rates or work any hardship on commerce.

Mr. PAYNE. I remember in the gentleman's amendment the words "in connection with any railroad."

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Washington and to this House that more than twenty times, on different occasions and at different places, the vice-president of the Pacific Mail Line and general manager, one and the same, told me that under no circumstances would his company consider a mail subsidy for that line unless it provided for twelve hundred thousand dollars, and I told him he couldn't have it, and that ended it.

Mr. POLLARD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. POLLARD. I would like to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. POLLARD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, in my time I would like to have the pending amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. POLLARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the wording of that amendment is such that it certainly will make it utterly impossible to bill goods through from Chicago or any other port of origin in the United States to a point in Australia, Hawaii, or any other port in the Pacific Ocean. It seems to me the committee does not desire to amend the bill in that way. All we want to do is to so amend the bill that these great railroad magnates can not own and operate these mail lines. I have an amendment here that is very simple that does that and has nothing whatever to do or no connection whatever with through billing, and that certainly ought not to be interfered with. I will read the amendment, which I shall offer if this amendment is voted down. It is as follows:

Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall become available for any person or any corporation, joint stock company, or association that has among its stockholders, directors, or officers any person that is now or may become at any future time an officer or director in a railroad company.

That, Mr. Chairman, meets the same objection, and it does not prevent through contracts.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak in opposition to the amendment. Let me say to the House that at the present time the Great Northern Steamship Company, which company owns the Minnesota and the Dakota, known as the Hill Line, running from Puget Sound to the Orient, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, now operating a line from San Francisco to the Orient, have the best ships sailing on the Pacific Ocean, and if this amendment prevails and this bill becomes a law those ships will be excluded from any benefit under this measure. Those ships are running to-day and running without a subsidy, carrying United States mails to the Orient.

Mr. WATSON. Will my friend point out to me how they could take advantage of it anyway? We have already excluded all existing ships.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, I know so far as that amendment is concerned that it will amount to a fly speck on the map of the world. It will be wiped out when we go into the House and get the yeas and nays. There is no doubt of that. Those lines would be excluded from any benefits under this measure. Those lines are running to-day and carrying United States mails, and last year carried 140 shipments of mails from the Pacific Coast to the Orient. There is no reason why the Great Northern Steamship Company, owned directly or indirectly by the Great Northern Railroad, or the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, owned or controlled by the Southern Pacific, should not carry United States mails if they would do it as cheaply as any other company; no reason in the world why a wealthy corporation or a wealthy man should not receive consideration at our hands just the same as any other party.

A few minutes ago the gentleman disputed the correctness of my statement about certain fast ships of certain speed. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company—and I have the record here—has five fast ships. There are thirty-eight American ships in existence on salt water to-day that have a speed of 16 knots or more. I have the names of the company and the number of ships owned by each company.

Mr. LITTAUER. Thirty-eight ships on salt water?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; of 16 knots or more. I will give you the names of the companies and the number of ships. The International Mercantile and Marine Company has six. The New England Navigation Company has four. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company has five. The New York and Cuban Mail Steamship Company has five. The Hudson Navigation Company has two. The Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, one. The Oceanic Steamship Company, five. The Metropolitan Steamship Company, one. The New York and Texas Steamship Company, one. The Merchant and Marine Transportation Company, four. C. H. Mallory & Co., one. The Maine Steamship Company, two. There may be a few of those ships that are not on salt water, but the records of Lloyds gives them there. I took the last and most official statement of it, the insurance company's statement, giving the home office of the company and the name of the ship and the owners, and I say that they would be excluded under the provisions of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. POLLARD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. TOWNSEND. To offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. POLLARD. To offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the members of the committee to offer an amendment first.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "that," in line 13, page 15, and insert the following:

"There shall be enrolled, in such manner and under such requirements as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, from the officers and men now and hereafter employed in the merchant marine and fisheries of the United States, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Great Lakes, such officers, petty officers, and men as may be capable of rendering services as members of a naval reserve, for duty in time of war, and who are willing to undertake such service, to be classified in grades and ratings according to their capacity as shown at time of enrollment. No man shall be thus enrolled who is not a citizen of the United States, either by birth or naturalization. These members of the Naval Reserve shall be enrolled for a period of four years, during which period they shall be subject to render service on call of the President in time of war. They shall also possess such qualifications, receive such instructions, and be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon proper audit by the Auditor for the Navy Department, to pay, out of any money to be annually appropriated therefor upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates, to each officer, petty officer, or man thus enrolled and employed in the merchant marine or fisheries, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Great Lakes as hereinafter provided, an annual retainer as follows: For each officer of the line or Engineer Corps, having the rank of lieutenant of the Naval Reserve, $110; for each officer of the line or Engineer Corps, having the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Naval Reserve, $90; for each officer of the line or Engineer Corps, having the rank of ensign in the Naval Reserve, $80; for each man with a rating of chief petty officer, $70; for each man with a rating of petty officer, first class, $60; for each man with a rating of petty officer, second class, $48; for each man with a rating of petty officer, third class, $40; for each seaman, first class, $36; for each seaman, second class, $30; for each seaman, third class, $24. Such retainer shall be paid at the end of each year of service on certificate, by the Secretary of the Navy, that the member of the Naval Reserve has satisfactorily complied with the regulations, and on certificate by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that such member has served satisfactorily for at least six months of the preceding twelve months on vessels of the United States in the merchant marine or in the deep-sea fisheries. The total number of officers, petty officers, and men enrolled in the Naval Reserve shall not at any time exceed 10,000.

"SEC. 2. That in the interest of the national defense and for the performance of the public services hereinafter specified, after July 1, 1907, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, subject to the provisions of this act, out of any money in the Treasury, to be annually appropriated therefor, upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates, to the owner or owners of any steam vessel of over 1,000 gross tons, and of any sail vessel of over 200 gross tons, hereafter built and registered in the United States or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof, engaged exclusively as a common carrier for the service of the public, subventions as hereinafter provided—that is to say, (a) the sum of $5 per gross registered ton for each vessel which has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of twelve months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed two months in making annual or extraordinary repairs; (b) the sum of $4 per gross registered ton for each vessel which, during any twelve consecutive months has been engaged in the foreign trade, by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of nine months or over, but less than twelve months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs; (c) the sum of $2.50 per gross registered ton for each vessel which during any twelve consecutive months has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of six months or over, but less than nine months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs.

"A vessel receiving a subvention under this section shall not receive any other subvention, subsidy, or bounty from the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 3. That before receiving any subvention under the provisions of section 2 of this act the owner or owners of any vessel shall contract, in writing, with sufficient sureties, with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to fulfill each and all of the following obligations:

"First. That said vessel may be taken and used by the United States for the national defense or for any public purpose at any time upon payment to the owner or owners of the fair actual value of the same at the time of the taking or a fair rate of hire to be agreed upon. And if there shall be a disagreement as to such fair actual value or fair rate of hire between the United States and the owner or owners of such vessel, the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to take the vessel at once, leaving the fair actual value or fair rate of hire to be determined thereafter by two impartial appraisers, one to be appointed by each of said parties, they to select a third, who shall act in such appraisement in case the two shall fail to agree, and the provisions of this subdivision shall be embodied in every contract between the vessel owner or owners and the United States.

"Second. That said vessel shall carry free of charge the mails of the United States, when the Postmaster-General shall so require, for the whole or any part of a voyage for which subvention shall be claimed.

"Third. That a vessel employed in the foreign trade shall maintain during the period so employed at least class A1 if a steam vessel, and class A1½ if a sail vessel, as such classes are now established by either the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit.

"Fourth. That all ordinary repair or overhauling of said vessel shall be made in the United States, except in cases where dry docking is necessary and no American dry dock of sufficient capacity shall be within a distance of 500 miles of the location of the ship when the repairs shall be needed.

"SEC. 4. That the contracts provided for in section 3 shall be for a period of one year and shall be renewed from time to time. At the expiration of each annual contract the owner of the vessel shall be required to prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in such manner as the said Secretary shall prescribe, that its obligations, each and all, have been satisfactorily complied with. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of subvention to which said owner shall be entitled in fulfillment of said contract and of the provisions of this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury upon proper audit shall thereupon pay the subvention due.

"SEC. 5. The subventions provided for in this act shall apply exclusively and be paid to the owner or owners of vessels engaged in foreign trade between ports in the United States and ports in South America.

"SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1907.

"SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, in whole or in part, whenever in its judgment the public interests shall so require, without, however, impairing in any wise the obligation of any specific contract then in force which shall have been entered into under the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of this act."

During the reading of the amendment the following occurred:

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand the Clerk is reading section 3 of the bill. We have not yet reached section 2 nor finished with section 1. Do I understand it is in order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is reading an amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan

Mr. SHERLEY. But, as I understand, the amendment relates to section 3 of the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands, if the gentleman from Kentucky will permit, that this proposition covers all propositions in this bill, and that the gentleman from Michigan offers this as an amendment to the first section, giving notice as he will, that if it is adopted he will move to strike out the other sections of the bill as they are reached.

Mr. SHERLEY. I asked in order to understand this did not preclude further amendments to the first section.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this amendment that it is not germane to the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that if the amendment is germane either to the substitute amendment or to the Senate bill it is in order, and the Chair overrules the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard in support of the amendment a few minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan. The Chair states, however, that this amendment will be held pending, and the question will not be put to it until all amendments have been passed upon which are offered to perfect the proposition.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment, then, will be in order to be discussed after all other amendments have been passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, at the end of line 8, insert:
"Provided, That subject to the foregoing provision every contract hereunder shall be awarded to that responsible bidder who will contract, under penalties prescribed by the Postmaster-General, for the highest running speed between the points named in this contract."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it was suggested upon the floor yesterday that although this bill provides for 16 and 14 knot ships, there is no provision in the bill binding the companies taking these contracts to operate these ships at the speed they are capable of. The object of this amendment is twofold. It is to get the highest possible speed, even if the contract be let for 16 or 14 knot ships, as provided in the bill, and, if possible, to secure bids for even more speedy vessels than those at the same price. It simply applies a rule now in use with reference to the railway mail. Between the city of Chicago and the Missouri River, where I live, there are six trunk lines of railroads. The Government does not offer any price above the regular one for fast mail service over those roads, but it lets the contract for the through mail to that road that will contract to carry it in the shortest time, and this amendment simply provides that, subject to all the foregoing provisions, the contract shall be let to that responsible bidder who will bind himself to give to the Government the highest speed between the points named in the contract.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will say to the gentleman I am decidedly in favor of this amendment, unless there is a defect about it, which I know the gentleman will understand. Is it so guarded in its language that a contract might be given to a bid that was not the highest rate of speed? May there not be other conditions that would be indispensable to the safe carrying of mail that might be overlooked for the mere question of speed?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think not; because it provides that it must be subject to all of the foregoing provisions. I feel confident the committee has safeguarded the matter in that respect.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman thinks that would protect it from the mere question of speed alone?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I inserted it deliberately with that purpose in mind.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to recognize a gentleman to speak in opposition to it.

Mr. GILL. No; I desire to speak in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some one who desires to speak in opposition to the amendment, if there be such a Member.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 1462) to establish one more fish-cultural station on Puget Sound, State of Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 91. Joint resolution adjusting the status of certain officers of the Army as to their period of service, required by the act of Congress approved June 30, 1882, to entitle an Army officer to retirement on his own application;

S. 8583. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Calhoun Falls;

S. 8584. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Hattons Ford;

S. 8581. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Trotters shoals;

S. 8580. An act granting land to Anna Johnson;

S. 8572. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Andersonville shoals; and

S. 7382. An act to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate recedes from its amendment No. 25 to the bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Also:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (S. 6078) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Elijah B. Hudson."

SUBSIDY BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire, as a part of my remarks and in my time, to have read an amendment which I had prepared and proposed to offer to this section of the bill, covering in part the proposition contained in the amendment now before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read for the information of the committee:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the figure "10," in line 18, page 15, of the bill, up to and including the word "prescribe," in line 4, page 16, and substituting in lieu thereof the following:
That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to advertise for proposals by any citizen or citizens of the United States for the carrying of mails on steamships hereafter built in the United States and registered in the United States, and the Postmaster-General shall contract for the carrying of mails, as hereinafter provided, with the citizen or citizens of the United States who shall offer in his or their bid the most expeditious service at the lowest cost to the Government for the carrying of mails to such ports in foreign countries as are hereinafter set forth; and said contract shall not be made to cover a longer period than five years.

Mr. GILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in this bill as it has been presented to this House by the committee it is absolutely in the hands of the Attorney-General to award the respective contracts provided for in this bill to any citizen or citizens or corporation or corporations that the Postmaster-General may prefer.

Now, I do not desire to say that the Postmaster-General in dealing with this matter will bestow these contracts unfairly, but I do say that the opportunity is open to the Postmaster-General. And I do say—and I am sure it is known to every Member of this House—that importunity will be made to the Postmaster-General to give these contracts to certain existing corporations controlling, at least on the Atlantic coast, all the vessels that we now have engaged in foreign trade, and owning, I may say, almost all the steam vessels engaged in our home trade.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I say, this bill leaves this matter open to the Postmaster-General to prefer an individual or to prefer a corporation

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio and Mr. SULZER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask my friend whether or not he proposes to talk on the general subject or to confine himself to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I desire to speak upon the general subject of subsidy, a question immediately raised by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON. I shall not object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the request, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that the gentleman from Ohio have fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is recognized for fifteen minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the idea of subsidy or any bounty or subvention for the support of private enterprise is repugnant to the great majority of our citizens. We are becoming the industrial sovereigns of the earth, and this position is due to our unparalleled advantages and to the force of individual initiative and energy. On the subject of subsidy that great Republican leader, President Garfield, said in some remarks in this House in 1870:

> There is one feature of this bill, the subsidy provision, which is odious to the American people. It is a feature, I think, which no man in the House—certainly no Representative of an inland district—can support and sustain himself before his constituents.

The argument is made to Republicans that such a measure as this is in line with a protective tariff. I deny it. In the first place, there is the essential distinction that while a tariff brings money into the Public Treasury a subsidy pays it out. [Applause.] Then there is a stronger distinction in the very nature of the case. You can build a wall around a country; you can enforce any kind of a domestic policy; you may levy a tariff in figures so great as to be prohibitive, but you can not exercise any such control over all the seas. There competition is unlimited and fitness and cheapness must prevail. We may cite Byron's apostrophe to the ocean:

> Man's control
> Stops with the shore.

So there is no reason why one who favors a protective tariff should favor such a bill as this. Let us note another essential distinction.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Is it not a fundamental principle of the protective-tariff system of the United States that our nation should make everything, produce everything that its climate, its soil, its genius, its natural resources, and its capital will enable it to make?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No; and I will go right on with that now.

It is conceded that this measure is for the purpose of making up a difference in the cost of construction and operation of ships, which will continue for all time. It may be remarked incidentally that it will not make transportation cheaper. You can not ship a bushel of wheat or a ton of iron for any less under this subsidy bill than you can now. You simply make a new class of ships, manned and owned by Americans, and bring them into the field of competition.

Now, my theory of the American protective tariff is not that it causes us to enter into competition for all time where we will be at a disadvantage. A nation would be, if not bankrupted, greatly hampered by such a policy. What has been the result of our protective tariff? It has created two sources of supply where only one existed before. It has enabled us to develop the capabilities of our people and to enjoy the wealth of all our latent resources. What has followed? In the majority of the items included in our tariff schedules the prices have lowered and employment has been increased. Particularly is this true in the cases of iron and steel. How is it with your shipping? Can American ingenuity make it any easier to climb a rope; can American invention diminish the cost of handling and repairing ships? There is no analogy between these items in a protective tariff and shipping. I want to say that I should not be in favor, and I do not believe this House would be in favor, of continuing a tariff for all time on articles where there is to be a perpetual disadvantage in competition with other countries. True, in our tariff schedules there are items which have been included as a matter of compromise and some a matter of experiment, where the prices are made higher and continue higher than they were before, but not as in the case of shipping.

I desire to say a word just here about a misapprehension that has gone abroad. That is that foreign shipping is built by subventions and subsidies. That is absolutely not correct. What does England pay for? For fast service for mail and for a naval auxiliary. The great body of her commerce is carried by her tramp steamships, and, in the language of one of their owners, these steamships receive no more subsidy or help from the national treasury than the outcast human beings from whom they are named. How about the German shipping? In Germany there are two great lines—the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American Line. The North German Lloyd receives a subsidy, the Hamburg-American Line does not; and yet it is the more prosperous and pays the larger dividends of the two. How, in the face of that, can you say that the merchant marine of Germany has been built up by subsidies? And you will find the world over that gain in merchant marine and the ownership of ships is not due to subsidies, but to some collateral fact, such as an increase in wealth or products for sale or in the interest or preferences of the people. One of the witnesses before the British commission said, in respect to the German merchant marine: "I think the interest taken in shipping in Germany, from the Emperor down, has done more to stimulate it to action and success than subsidies. This help is moral rather than material." And so elsewhere success has not been dependent upon subventions.

These do not cause a healthy plant to grow. Our own experience in this country in the matter of subsidies has not been free from failure on the part of those who have taken advantage of them, or free from corruption in the relations between the Government and those who desired them. In dwelling upon reasons why we have not more vessels in the merchant marine of this country, if I had more time I would like to go more into the detail. Some say it is due to our protective tariff because our vessels have no return cargoes. But whatever may be the importance of this cause, it is very small in comparison with certain other disadvantages which exist in the very nature of the case. In the first place, the products of our country are largely raw material, and the outgoing cargoes are much heavier than the incoming. I have prepared some figures on this, and I find that even in the port of New York, the great import harbor of our country, the weight of the outgoing cargoes exceeds by a million tons those which come in.

When we come to Galveston, the weight of the exports is twenty-four times that of the imports. From Savannah, the value of the exports is thirty-five times that of the imports.

I will insert a table comparing tonnage or values at leading ports.

Tonnage or value of freight entering and clearing at leading ports.

| | Imports. | Exports. |
|---|---|---|
| New York, year ending June 30, 1906.....tons.. | 4,160,000 | 5,206,000 |
| Boston, calendar year 1905.....do.... | 974,712 | 1,294,815 |
| Philadelphia, calendar year 1905.....do.... | 1,365,245 | 3,267,439 |
| New Orleans, calendar year 1905.....do.... | 633,131 | 2,155,143 |
| Baltimore, year ending June 30, 1906.....value.. | $30,655,000 | $109,801,000 |
| Galveston, year ending June 30, 1906.....tons.. | 57,966 | 1,433,641 |
| Savannah, calendar year 1905.....value.. | $1,706,000 | $62,546,000 |

Now, it is desirable in all kinds of transportation that the freight carried both ways should be as nearly as possible equal; but just so long as conditions are as they now are we shall labor under this disadvantage of inequality in shipments. What would be the result of a subsidy the purpose of which is that some may go under the American flag? Those American ships that did not receive the subsidy would be placed at a disadvantage. The foreign tramp steamer would turn aside in many of its trips from our country and go from England, France, or Germany, not to the United States, but to the Argentine Republic or some other place where it could obtain charters more advantageously.

Then there is another disadvantage of the American merchant marine. The cargoes are not so varied. The demand is not so great as in western and northwestern Europe, where there is a constant demand, where there are all the routes to the Mediterranean, to the Black Sea, to the Orient, to South America, and to the Cape, as against the more limited routes of commerce in this country. This advantage makes it possible for boats to receive quicker employment.

I desire to say, in regard to a subsidy or any treatment of the American merchant marine, that the question is so complicated with other problems—railroad rates on products to the seaboard for export, port dues, tariff regulations of the different nations, banking facilities, the existence of agencies abroad for the selling of goods, and you may add, as a general term, the preferences and affiliations of the people with whom we are to deal, so that a subsidy alone is not going to restore or build up trade. There must be intelligent and effective treatment of all these other questions. And we should bear in mind the general principle, the possession of commodities for sale precedes shipping, not shipping the possession of commodities for sale. When there is anything to sell, boats can be found to carry it. Why, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] called attention forcibly yesterday to the place where there is trouble in the carrying of freight. It is on land. Is there anyone who has to wait long for a boat to carry his product over the sea? That is not where American commerce is handicapped. It is by the patent insufficiency of our facilities for the carrying of the freight on land between the different portions of our country.

Now, I must in the brief time allotted to me pass by quite a number of things that I should like to mention. What is the real reason for the decadence of our merchant marine? In the first place, the tastes of our people are not in that direction. In Norway, in England, in Germany, generation after generation follow the sea. In this country the son of a sailor wants to study law or go into some profession. The life of a sailor is to most of our people an employment of drudgery and danger. Why is it that investments are not in that direction? Because there is such an infinite variety of opportunities for enterprise on the land which are more attractive and profitable than investments in shipping. We have here this great empire lying before us. When the pioneer shall have spread over all these millions of acres, when every valley shall have been exploited, and factories shall have crowned every hill, American enterprise will turn toward the sea. And it will not wait until then. It will look in that direction long before; but just at present, with higher profits and that which is more congenial and to which our people are more accustomed, there is an absorbing interest in investments upon the land.

The substantial rehabilitation of our merchant marine will come when our investors desire to invest in ships and when our people desire to man them. Some say that is waiting a long time. But must we pay from the Public Treasury an amount to make that business profitable toward which the enterprises of the people and their preferences do not tend? Why, in the old days in Maine and in the coast towns of New England the sea kings sailed all over the globe. Our shipping was upon every sea; but that was before the day of the great inland development of the country, and we are now engaged in that development, a development which is the marvel of the world and will continue to be the marvel of the world more and more in the future.

Let us notice that under all these so-called "subsidy bills" the sailors must, the majority of them, be natives or citizens of the United States. How would we get along in our steel mills if it was provided that the employees should all be natives or citizens of the United States? I have forgotten the exact phraseology of the bill in its requirements.

Mr. MANN. Natives or naturalized.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Natives or naturalized. You are nationalizing this industry by this bill. You are putting it under a handicap that other lines of industry would not endure for a year.

There is an argument in favor of the desirability of having a reserve for time of war, but I call your attention to one or two things——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I thank the House for its courtesy. [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] may have fifteen minutes in which to reply to his colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for fifteen minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it is no serious charge against a public man that he has changed front and gone over from the position he has heretofore advocated and become a zealous devotee and promoter of the very sentiments which he fought in years gone by. Mr. Gladstone did that and Calhoun was a protectionist when Webster was a free trader, and Webster was a protectionist when Calhoun became a free trader.

I want to call the attention of the committee now to a condition that happened in the House of Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress. We had on that occasion a postal subsidy bill. I have a copy of it in my hand, and I will put it in my speech. It is identical in principle and nearly identical in every respect with the bill now under consideration.

That postage bill would have worked out precisely the results of this bill, except that this bill is highly conservative in its character, in that this bill limits the Postmaster-General to certain specified postal lines which we put into the bill itself, thereby retaining in Congress the control of the expenditure of the money. That bill was a broad, sweeping authority to the Postmaster-General to make any number of contracts to carry the mail anywhere on earth.

The bill, after its passage in the Senate of the United States, came into the House of Representatives on the 27th of February, in the year 1891. The bill was very bitterly fought on the floor of the House. Party lines were not adhered to in their entirety, and there was a decided division between the radical supporters of the bill and gentlemen who were seeking a modification of its terms and ultimately to cripple and possibly to destroy the bill.

One of the gentlemen who was prominent in opposition to that bill was the now distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives. He sought to bring about certain changes in the bill, which were at last adopted, and then the present Speaker of the House voted for the bill.

I have not time in fifteen minutes to do more than to state how my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and myself stood on that important question at that very important epoch in his career.

I will cite gentlemen of the House who wish to verify my statements to page 3501 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February, 1891. I have this to say, that attack after attack was made on the bill in the form, first, of amendments of the bill—amendments that were in their nature calculated to impair the efficiency and make a very radical bill less effective and more conservative. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and myself had great pleasure, as we have now, to be colleagues, and with about the same amount of Congressional experience. We voted side by side with the radical element in favor of the Senate bill without amendment, a complete subsidy bill, as I have stated. We voted for the bill every step of the way, and I cite page after page showing that the yeas and nays were called over and over again, and among the supporters of the bill you will find the name of Mr. GROSVENOR every time except one, which I will directly refer to.

The bill was finally amended on an arrangement—I should say conspiracy—formed by the now Speaker of the House, which, in my judgment, impaired its efficiency, but it did not deteriorate one particle the zeal of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] for the support of it, and when, upon the last issue, a final vote was taken upon the passage of the bill, I refused to vote for it, because of what I believed was damage done to the bill by amendment, but my friend from Ohio, so intent was he in favor of subsidy of mail lines all over this country, everywhere, without restriction in price or anything else, except the price in mileage, that he even voted for the bill and aided in its passage when I couldn't stand it. [Laughter and applause.]

I shall put the bill itself in the RECORD, and the gentleman will find when he puts in a double column for comparison the Senate bill that we had under consideration and the bill which we now have under consideration that this is a bill of marked conservatism as compared with the radicalism of that bill.

The bill finally went to the committee of conference, and then the question, of course, of opposition on concurrence was lost sight of, so far as the RECORD discloses.

Now, I do not do this at all to militate against the distinguished ability and statesmanship of my distinguished colleague. He is a man who when he studies a thing gets to the bottom of it pretty successfully. Certainly no man has ever conquered the troubles of the river and harbor bill as he has since I have been in Congress. [Applause.] But the trouble about it is that somewhere, some place along the line he did not change his position upon details, but seems to have changed his position upon the principles that underlie the whole proposition. And certainly I think he ought to be able to explain to us where it was, when it was, and how it was. The law of 1891 went into effect. It was a law that had been advocated by Democrats as well as by Republicans. It was a law voted for by Democrats as well as Republicans. It was a law that was administered by Democrats as well as Republicans. It was a law that was not attacked in the Cleveland Administration. In eight years of the service of that distinguished President of the United States no attack was made upon this law, and now what have we here? Every principle of that law is maintained in the bill at bar. Every underlying principle is here, and the only question is—and not anything else involved—shall we extend to certain places the operation of the law now on the statute books, and I wish the gentleman would tell me how it was that he could vote for the radical bill of 1891, but can not support the bill of 1907? [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. May I speak now, Mr. Chairman, for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. For how long a time?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. For five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his colleague may be permitted to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, my colleague has overlooked the fact that my remarks were addressed to the general principle of subsidy, and were immediately called out and were pertinent here because of the offering of an amendment by the gentleman from Michigan, which provided for a tonnage subsidy. In the next place, it is true that I did vote some sixteen years ago with my colleague for this bill allowing compensation to the mail lines under which mail lines had been created. That law is in force now. But to turn aside from subsidy tonnage provision to the mail provision, which immediately called out my remarks, I would point out the difference between that bill and this. We have a contract here with one of the lines, and it is proposed to cancel that contract—a contract in force until 1912—just as valid a contract as the Government of the United States or any individual could make. What are you proposing to do in this bill? To let the contractees get out of that contract because, forsooth, it is said here that they can not make money on it. [Applause.] That is your bill.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, I have not the greatest respect for that continuity which would make a man vote, act, and think in 1907 as in 1891. [Applause and laughter.] I sincerely hope, however much I may be in error, that I have learned something since then. Consistency is a jewel valuable rather because of its rarity than by reason of its intrinsic value. I have little respect for the man who would vote in some way in 1907 because he voted so in 1891, sixteen years ago. His motto would be, "I think that I thought in 1891," or, "In 1891 I thought that I was thinking." [Laughter and applause.] Well, if you think you were thinking in 1891, why should you not put that same thinking cap on in 1907 and endeavor to arrive at correct conclusions? If the world stands by the men that are consistent alone, I am afraid it will stand by many wrong and unprogressive things. It had better stand by those who look onward, who are progressive, who have no pride of opinion, who, when they realize that they were wrong yesterday or ten or twenty years ago, will to-day change their minds and do something else. [Applause.] To those who have the opposite opinion there should be a monument reared, even while they live, and on it should be carved these words:

"Sacred to the men who were consistent. They always lived lives in which they were consistent.

"They were long on consistency, but short on wisdom." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, in order to ascertain the gentleman's position—and I am entirely sincere about it, because I would really like to know where the gentleman stands on this bill—I will ask him a question, and perhaps involved in that may be two other questions. The gentleman has stated that he had addressed his former remarks to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], which was a tonnage subsidy proposition. In answer to the question that he did not like the pending measure, he was stating that we were seeking to cancel an existing contract now in operation under its provision. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not if the oriental lines were stricken out he would be in favor of the South American propositions in this bill?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not wish to answer those questions until those paragraphs are reached. I regard them as far less objectionable than a tonnage subsidy, and if from the wreck of this bill something can be retained which would do good to the country I would certainly join in voting for it. I would not want to be understood as bringing forward any such proposition, but if it is not a subsidy in disguise, if it is not an entering wedge for subsidy, if it is not virtually to benefit the shipbuilders, if it is intended for legitimate mail service and for improving such communications as are incidental to the mail service, I shall not oppose it. That I will say to the gentleman right now. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on pages 17 and 18 of the bill, the paragraphs marked fifth and sixth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 17 and 18, strike out paragraphs fifth and sixth.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet addressing the Chair. I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is not much that I can say more than has been said, but I desire to call attention——

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that we have just voted upon this motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan was on his feet desiring recognition, and the Chair will hear him.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this amendment proposes to strike out of the bill the two provisions for the oriental lines. I believe it has already been demonstrated to the committee that these two provisions are the most objectionable ones in the bill. The trouble which gentlemen have had in trying to amend the first paragraph of the bill indicates some of the difficulties that they themselves encounter. The reason why I do not object so much to the provision as to the South American lines, as amended by the gentleman from Iowa, is because we have had recently called to our attention by the Secretary of State reasons why such a provision might bring some benefit to the country. But there are others. I realize that our policy known as the "Monroe doctrine," which imposes upon us the practical duty of preserving the integrity, so far as foreign interposition is concerned, of the states of South America perhaps will be somewhat aided by a closer communication if it can be brought about in this way between the United States and South American countries. We are building the Panama Canal. We are close to South America at the present time. Furthermore, I believe that it is well now for us to go slowly in this matter of subsidies, because calling them by any other name does not change the situation, and the gentlemen of this House while arguing for a purely mail subsidy are insisting that the principal object is that of trade and that is to be accomplished through this method called a mail subsidy or subvention.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that by bringing this amendment up at this time we can get directly at the very meat of the matter and determine whether those who favor any kind of a subsidy are of a sufficient number to pass any bill at all. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I have brought this amendment up at this time, thinking that we can possibly adopt the provisions relative to the Pacific and Atlantic lines in connection with South America and eliminate the question which prevents so many of us from supporting the bill as a whole.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, personally I favor the striking out of the fifth paragraph and oppose the striking out of the sixth. I therefore demand a division of the question and a submission of the motion to strike out separately as to the two paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be divided.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent to include in my amendment paragraph 7 also? I had intended to strike out all of the oriental lines, and supposed that I had done so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment so as to include paragraph 7.

Mr. KAHN. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope that will not be objected to, because we can have a vote on each one——

Mr. KAHN. But we want to discuss them separately.

Mr. PARKER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to know if the gentleman desires to strike out all of paragraph 7 down to the end of the section, or only that part down to the proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair can not answer that.

Mr. PARKER. Then I will ask the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I desire to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to oppose the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I think this committee ought to realize what is or ought to be the condition if the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan should prevail. If this bill should pass with that amendment striking out the trans-Pacific lines, there will yet be left in the bill two lines from the Atlantic to the eastern coast of South America and two lines from the Gulf to the north and east coast of South America and one line along the western coast of South America. I know that it is the purpose of the amendment and of many Members upon this floor to provide two lines to South America alone, but in so doing we ought to realize exactly what will be accomplished. The reason for the passage of any bill upon this subject would be, as has been often said on this floor, to extend our lines of foreign communications under our own flag, to extend our own foreign trade, to extend our political influence, and to provide for the national defense by sea.

With these important propositions in mind I think this committee and the House ought to compare conditions as to these matters which would prevail under such a bill confined alone to South America with conditions prevailing upon the Pacific Ocean. First, as to the means of communication between the Atlantic ports and the east coast of South America. I hold here in my hand a list of vessels plying during the last year between the port of New York alone and the east coast of South America. There were more than 170 trips made in eleven months of last year. They are clipped from the issue of Thursday, December 6, 1906, of the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin:

NO LACK OF VESSELS FOR SOUTH AMERICA—RECORD SHOWS SAILINGS OF MORE THAN FOUR PER WEEK—THESE FIGURES ARE FOR THE EAST COAST OF SOUTH AMERICA ONLY—THE TONNAGE OF VESSELS EMPLOYED AVERAGES ABOUT 4,500 TONS AND RUNS AS HIGH AS 10,000 TONS—ABOUT 170 SAILINGS SHOWN IN ELEVEN MONTHS.

Since the revival of the subsidy agitation at Washington one of the favorite arguments in its support has been that of insufficient sailing opportunities. To show the facts of the case, a complete list of sailings from the port of New York to Brazilian and River Plate ports has been prepared by the Maritime Association of this city. The list is appended below and suggests no lack of tonnage. It gives the date of sailing, the name of the vessel, the destination, and the agent of each vessel sailing between January 1 and November 30, 1906. It also shows that during the eleven months there have been 170 sailings between the ports in question, or at the rate of about four per week. The tonnage of these ships averages 4,500 tons, and in some instances is as high as 10,000 tons.

This list of sailings covers the bulk of our traffic with ports on the east coast of South America. It does not, however, include the whole trade, but only, as above said, the Brazilian and River Plate ports. There are also a number of additional sailings to the east coast of South America from the Gulf ports, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Boston not given in this list. The following is the list in detail:

According to this statement, for the month of March there will be seven regular mails from New York to Brazil and Buenos Ayres, while the pending bill provides for only four during a similar period. There will be seven regular mails from New York—three to Rio Janeiro, four to Buenos Ayres and Montevideo—and the three to Brazil also carry mail to Argentina.

So that there is right now under the present law, paid for out of the postal revenues, seven sailings in March—nearly twice as many lines as provided by this bill, carrying mail to the identical places to be provided for by this bill.

Mr. POLLARD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. POLLARD. I understood the gentleman to say that there are seven lines of vessels running to South America?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say any such thing. I said that the sheet from the Post-Office Department shows that there will be seven sailings for the month of March, carrying mails by recognized lines to the various ports of South America provided by the paragraphs of this bill. That is what I said.

Mr. McCALL. May I ask the gentleman what time a letter would take in reaching Rio Janeiro in one of those ships?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It will be probably two to three weeks.

Mr. McCALL. I have a letter from the Assistant Postmaster-General in which he states that the average time at present is about twenty-five days from New York to Rio Janeiro. It would require about nine or ten days by the ships provided in this bill.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, this may interest the gentlemen. Here is the schedule of the Royal Mail Steamship Company, of Great Britain, receiving the postal subsidies of Great Britain, for mail service to Brazil and Argentina, and, if I remember correctly, receiving about the same amount which is proposed by this bill to pay for the schedule to Argentina or the schedule to Brazil, while the British line provides both services. That schedule will be inserted in the RECORD, and shows a sailing about every five days from Southampton to the east coast of South America. There are eight or ten steamships of 5,000 to 10,000 tons, so that they will be about the same size, and their schedule time is twenty-two days from Southampton to Buenos Ayres.

I have a statement here of the Hamburg-American Line, showing four different routes from Hamburg to Brazil and Argentina for about the same price that we pay by this bill for two to the east coast of South America. It is important right here to remember what this bill really will accomplish.

There will start from New York two steamers running over the identical route for nearly 5,000 miles to Rio de Janeiro, both getting mail subsidies for all of this distance; but one must then stop at Rio de Janeiro and the other must proceed about 800 miles farther to Buenos Ayres. The one steamer to either port is not allowed by the following provision of this bill to do any mail business with the other port:

Provided, That a vessel receiving compensation for mail service pursuant to contract on a voyage on this route shall not also receive compensation for mail service pursuant to contract on said voyage on the first route as described above.

This is wasteful and extravagant, and the members of this committee who are insisting that the Pacific lines must be stricken out must have difficulty in reconciling themselves to paying for duplicate service for more than four-fifths of the entire distance from New York without relative benefit to the United States. The above schedules show such waste is not permitted by the British or the German governments. They get full value for their payments, while here the service is almost duplicated, and in no other line now running on the ocean would such a condition be tolerated. Yet some gentlemen are willing to swallow this extravagance but cut out the Pacific lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more in order to compare the Pacific conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to show further some of the conditions on the east coast which should be understood by the gentlemen before they vote, but it will not be possible on account of time. Let us consider the conditions on the Pacific coast. From Seattle there will be only six sailings next month. Five of them are by foreign lines and only one by an American line. I insert the schedule in the RECORD.

Remember further, that this House has already provided so that the Pacific Mail Line, or the Harriman lines, and the Great Northern Steamship Company, or the Hill line, can not take advantage of anything under this act by excluding existing ships. This is not the kind of a policy to encourage an enterprising and adventurous concern to embark in the shipping business, and it would seem to discriminate against those who have borne the burden of sustaining American commerce and favor the laggards who only wait for your bounty. But the House has so decided and so it stands. On the other side of the Pacific Ocean there are five to ten times the population that there is or can be for generations in South America, and their trade is many fold larger and more important and for generations, so far as we can see, will vastly exceed anything which can be expected from South America. Our exports to the Oriental and Australian ports are more than twice what they are to the South American ports, and there are five times greater opportunities to extend our trade on the Pacific than there are in South America. Last year we exported to South America, to the ports reached on its eastern coast by the lines provided by this bill, about $65,000,000; to the ports reached by the Pacific lines stricken from this bill more than $135,000,000. The products of the section which I in part represent and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] in part represents do not go to South America. They go either to the Atlantic or to the Pacific. So that if it be the desire of Members of this House by the enactment of this measure to extend our foreign trade, if the products of our factories and fields are to bring the prices we want and need them to bring in order to maintain our standard of living, it must be more by the extension of the Pacific trade and not by depending upon the trade to South America. I herein insert a table showing our exports during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, of various articles to the South American countries reached by this bill, as compared with the Asiatic countries whose lines are stricken from it.

Moreover, the vessels to South America to be provided by the bill have not the capacity for carrying but a small proportion of this freight, either of exports or imports. The cargo capacity of the steamers to be provided for the east coast of South America will probably not exceed 2,500 tons to each steamer if a 10,000-ton steamer be provided. The total capacity of all of them will not exceed 5,000 tons a month, or 60,000 tons per annum. That is only one-sixth of the coffee alone which is imported into this country from South America, and less than one-half or one-third of the sugar alone imported from South America into this country. It will not help to extend our trade to the extent which the gentlemen expect who are urging the passage of this bill. It will not furnish vessels for the national defense to any considerable number, though it will improve our facilities for direct communication. But how is it on the Pacific? Last year there was exported more than 3,000,000 barrels of flour alone from the Pacific coast over the Pacific lines.

There were exported over $32,000,000 worth of cotton goods, and I think about $3,000,000 to South American ports. If we desire to extend our trade, to employ our people, to dispose of our products, to steady our prices, the great avenue for extension is across the Pacific. Where will be the next great danger of the future requiring our naval strength? Will it be on the South Atlantic or on the Pacific? Where will it be necessary to construct our shipyards to provide for the national defense? Will it be facing the South Atlantic or on the Pacific? This question hardly needs an answer. Everyone realizes the great contests of the future, commercial and military, will be on the Pacific. No one foresees any possible danger on the South Atlantic. Is this now a time for this great nation to voluntarily abandon the field of the greatest contest? Shall we decide of our own motion to withdraw from the lists and leave the greatest field of the world's future activities to our more adventurous rivals? If this measure is destined to mean anything for our foreign trade, for the national defense, for extending our lines of communication, we need the extension across the Pacific many times more than we do to the South Atlantic. We all realize the provisions for our foreign trade everywhere are not exactly adequate, and it would be perhaps an improvement to have this bill passed improving our conditions to the South Atlantic, but it is a necessity to have an improvement of conditions across the Pacific. You provide two lines from the Gulf; you provide two lines from the Atlantic to the east coast of South America. Why not provide that in addition to existing facilities there shall be one, two, or three lines across the Pacific, the scene of the future great expansion of the trade, of the influence, of the danger of our country? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Michigan to modify his amendment so as to include paragraph 7.

Mr. KAHN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise in order that the House may take up privileged business.

The committee, under the order, accordingly rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS ON PUGET SOUND.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a duplicate engrossed copy of Senate bill 1462, to establish one or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound, State of Washington, the original of which was missing this morning. The motion of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Debate is closed upon the motion.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 145, noes 68.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington and Mr. WILLIAMS.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 129, noes 73.

Accordingly (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative), the motion was rejected.

MINING CLAIMS IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8984) to amend the laws governing labor or improvements upon mining claims in Alaska, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments, with the exception of No. 9; and I also move to disagree to No. 9 and ask for a conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman give some explanation of the bill. I do not see the Democratic conferee in his seat.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, it will only take a moment to explain this bill. Alaska having no legislature has been unable to pass a regulation as to the record of proof of work upon mining claims. This House passed a bill providing that 25 per cent of the work upon such claims could be done upon a public highway, and also provided for a record of the work that had been done on claims substantially in the same form that is now the law of Montana, Colorado, and various other mining States. The Senate has stricken out the original highway proposition, and that is not an essential in the proposition as to the record of the claim.

They have, however, stricken out one clause that ought to remain in the bill, and it is a provision that where the proof of labor has been filed and recorded that the burden of proof then shall shift to anyone contesting the claim; that the filing of this proof and recording shall be prima facie evidence of compliance with the law. That is substantially the same as the law now is in most of the mineral land States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like the gentleman to explain the difference between that and the United States land laws on mining claims where it requires a ninety days' notice to be posted.

Mr. LACEY. This is not a question of location of a claim; it is a question of annual assessment work. The United States law is silent upon this provision. It leaves that to the local legislature. The State law usually fixes it so that any man can have this done at any time, thirty, or sixty, or ninety days after the time in which the assessment work should be done. Now, it can not be provided for in Alaska by local statute. The only legislation Alaska can have must come from Congress, so that we should by act of Congress give them the same advantage that miners have in the other States and Territories that do not have to come to Congress; and this bill substantially complies with the usual requirement that is provided in the other public land States and Territories.

There is one point that I think ought to go to conference, and I think the Senate should yield their judgment on that feature in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How many clerks of record are there in Alaska where men may record their mining deeds and other deeds?

Mr. LACEY. As many as there are court commissioners.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And then these mining deeds are to be filed and kept of record?

Mr. LACEY. They have to be filed with the Federal officers, but there is no provision for keeping the record of the annual assessment work; and it is necessary to preserve these records and also desirable that the records should be made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Under the laws of some of the Western Territories, particularly New Mexico and Arizona, it is not required to make any record of the work that has been done.

Mr. LACEY. The bill as amended permits the filing and record of proof of work.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. By the United States mining laws?

Mr. LACEY. The Revised Statutes give authority to States and Territories to legislate as to matters of detail of this kind.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. LACEY. And then, again, in the State and Territorial law this question is usually fully provided for, and this bill will give the same advantage in Alaska.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman why they make it mandatory to say that a man on a mining claim must have his proof recorded within sixty or ninety days or lose his claim.

Mr. LACEY. The provision of the House was it should require it to be filed, but on failure to file the burden of proof was changed. The Senate struck out the word "shall" and inserted the word "may." We think that the effect will be about the same. It merely transfers the burden of proof. And I want to say, for the information of those gentlemen who live in States outside of the operations of the mineral-land laws, that it complies with the provisions of the Revised Statutes expressly reserving to States and Territories the privilege of legislating on matters of this kind.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe, under the gentleman's explanation, that the Senate bill will be a better bill than the House bill, because you make it mandatory.

Mr. LACEY. I think that the conferees will restore the feature that the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection if you make it "may" instead of "shall."

Mr. LACEY. As to the ninth amendment, I shall move to nonconcur and ask for a conference.

Mr. SULZER. What is the ninth amendment?

Mr. LACEY. The ninth amendment is this: We put in the bill a provision that when this affidavit has been filed the burden of proof should be on the contestant or the party opposed to the proof. If it has not been filed, if the claimant has neglected to file the proof, then the burden is on him to show that he did the work.

Mr. SULZER. That ought to be the law.

Mr. LACEY. The Senate struck that out and I trust that we can get them to recede.

The amendments, with the exception of amendment 9, were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on disagreeing to the amendment No. 9.

The question was taken; and Senate amendment No. 9 was disagreed to.

Mr. LACEY. I move that the House ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LACEY, Mr. MONDELL, and Mr. BURNETT.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 25851) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD reserved all points of order.

ALLEN V. REED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 7676, an act authorizing the appointment of Allen V. Reed, now a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a commodore on the retired list of the Navy, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DAWSON, Mr. BATES, and Mr. GREGG.

CHARLES W. DAKIN AND THOMAS J. HENNESSY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill H. R. 15909, an act to reward the widow and minor son of Capt. Charles W. Dakin, and the widow and minor children of Thomas J. Hennessy, late of the San Francisco fire department, who lost their lives while fighting a fire on board of the U. S. Army transport Meade, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

DAM ACROSS ST. JOSEPH RIVER, ST. JOSEPH COUNTY, MICH.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25832) to authorize Herman L. Hartenstein to construct a dam across the St. Joseph River, near the village of Mottville, St. Joseph County, Mich.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Herman L. Hartenstein, a citizen of the State of Michigan, his heirs and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the St. Joseph River, at any point up the stream within 1 mile from the highway bridge at the village of Mottville, St. Joseph County, in the State of Michigan, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONSIDERATION OF PRIVATE BILLS AT EVENING SESSION.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to so modify the order with respect to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar at the night session as to require three objections instead of one to prevent the consideration of a bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman mean objections from three persons?

Mr. DALZELL. Three persons instead of one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DAM ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25846) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Calhoun Falls, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Hugh MacRae Company, a corporation organized under the laws of South Carolina, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a dam across the Savannah River extending from a point in Elbert County, Ga., to a point in Abbeville County, S. C., upon or in the vicinity of Calhoun Falls, and all works incident thereto in the utilization of the power thereby developed, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to amend or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. AIKEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WHITE STONE HILLS BATTLEFIELD.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25365) to permit the State of North Dakota to sell a portion of certain lands heretofore granted to it as a memorial park on the White Stone Hills battlefield for the purpose of raising funds for improving and beautifying that park, which I send to the desk. I will state that the bill has been already read, and before asking unanimous consent for its present consideration, because it was objected to this morning, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota sends to the desk a bill which was objected to this morning, for which he desires unanimous consent for its present consideration, but before doing so submits the following proposed amendments, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, after the word "empowered," in line 4, page 1, by inserting "within five years from the passage of this act."

After the word "monuments," line 1, page 2, insert the words "upon an."

After the word "grounds," in line 2, page 2, insert the words "remaining unsold."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that this is a bill which was offered by the gentleman's colleague, Mr. GRONNA, this morning, and to which objection was made.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I objected, but some amendments have been proposed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of what these amendments are.

Mr. MANN. I can give an explanation of the amendments, so far as they are concerned. It first restricts the sale to within five years, and second, requires only that the monuments authorized shall be put upon the ground. As the bill was before it authorized monuments anywhere, and it required those monuments to be put upon the grounds remaining unsold.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of Mr. GRONNA, and in the absence of information as to whether these amendments would suit him, and in view of the further fact that when he offered the bill this morning it was objected, I shall object for the present.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will allow a word of explanation. This is my bill. Mr. GRONNA called it up for me at my request in my absence. He is absolutely satisfied with the amendments. They have been submitted to him. It is my bill. I was unable to come and my colleague, Mr. GRONNA, kindly called it up for me. There is no possible objection to it if the gentleman really understood the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather the gentleman would renew the request sometime when Mr. GRONNA is present.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BRIDGE ACROSS OUACHITA RIVER AND D'ARBONNE RIVER, LOUISIANA.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25811) to authorize the Monroe, Farmerville and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge over the Ouachita River and one over the D'Arbonne River in Louisiana, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Monroe, Farmerville and Northwestern Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Louisiana, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Ouachita River at or near Monroe, also a bridge across the D'Arbonne River at or near Farmerville, in the State of Louisiana, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or appeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. There seems to be a clerical error which will require an amendment, which the Chair will ask the Clerk to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 2, line 13, strike out the word "appeal" and insert in lieu thereof the word "repeal."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

"SEC. 5. That no mark by which the goods of the owner of the mark may be distinguished from other goods of the same class shall be refused registration as a trade-mark on account of the nature of such mark unless such mark—

"(a) Consists of or comprises immoral or scandalous matter.

"(b) Consists of or comprises the flag or coat of arms or other insignia of the United States, or any simulation thereof, or of any State, or municipality, or of any foreign nation, or of any design or picture that has been or may hereafter be adopted by any fraternal society as its emblem: Provided, That trade-marks which are identical with a registered or known trade-mark owned and in use by another, and appropriated to merchandise of the same descriptive properties, or which so nearly resemble a registered or known trade-mark owned and in use by another, and appropriated to merchandise of the same descriptive properties, as to be likely to cause confusion or mistake in the mind of the public, or to deceive purchasers, shall not be registered: Provided, That no mark which consists merely in the name of an individual, firm, corporation, or association, not written, printed, impressed, or woven in some particular or distinctive manner or in association with a portrait of the individual or merely in words or devices which are descriptive of the goods with which they are used, or of the character or quality of such goods, or merely a geographical name or term, shall be registered under the terms of this act: Provided further, That no portrait of a living individual may be registered as a trade-mark, except by the consent of such individual, evidenced by an instrument in writing: And provided further, That nothing herein shall prevent the registration of any mark used by the applicant or his predecessors, or by those from whom title to the mark is derived, in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with Indian tribes, which was in actual and exclusive use as a trade-mark of the applicant or his predecessors from whom he derived title for ten years next preceding the passage of this act."

SEC. 2. That section 6 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That on the filing of an application for registration of a trade-mark which complies with the requirements of this act, and the payment of the fees herein provided for, the Commissioner of Patents shall cause an examination thereof to be made; and if on such examination it shall appear that the applicant is entitled to have his trade-mark registered under the provisions of this act, the Commissioner shall cause the mark to be published at least once in the Official Gazette of the Patent Office. Any person who believes he would be damaged by the registration of a mark may oppose the same by filing notice of opposition, stating the grounds therefor, in the Patent Office within thirty days after the publication of the mark sought to be registered, which said notice of opposition shall be verified by the person filing the same before one of the officers mentioned in section 2 of this act. An opposition may be filed by a duly authorized attorney, but said opposition shall be null and void unless verified by the opposer within a reasonable time after such filing. If no notice of opposition is filed within said time, the Commissioner shall issue a certificate of registration therefor, as hereinafter provided for. If on examination an application is refused, the Commissioner shall notify the applicant, giving him his reasons therefor."

ELIJAH B. HUDSON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (S. 6078) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Elijah B. Hudson."

The question was taken; and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under the order, the House stands in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session, with the Speaker in the chair.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the order under which the House meets.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, by unanimous consent, Ordered, That hereafter during this session a motion to consider in the House, as in Committee of the Whole House, bills on the Private Calendar of the classes hereinafter described shall have the same privilege as is given by the rules on Fridays to motions to go into Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

All bills not objected to after five minutes' explanation thereof, reported from committees other than the Committee on Pensions, Invalid Pensions, Claims, and War Claims, excepting bills proposing to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will proceed with the order of business. The Clerk will report the first bill under the order.

LANDS FOR THE UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA.

The first bill upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17431) granting to the regents of the University of Oklahoma section No. 36, in township No. 9 north of range No. 3 west of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the House has passed that same bill as another bill—namely, H. R. 25013—on January 28 last, which was an act granting to the regents of the University of Oklahoma in section No. 36, in township No. 9 north of range No. 3 west of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla. It seems to me that that bill covered the same thing.

The SPEAKER. What is the section that the gentleman has there? This is section No. 36.

Mr. MANN. Section No. 36, in township No. 9 north of range No. 3 west of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla.

The SPEAKER. When did it pass the House?

Mr. MANN. On January 28.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will call the next bill, and the last bill will be passed without prejudice.

There was no objection.

LANDS IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18850) donating lands in Oklahoma Territory for educational purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the northeast quarter of section 13, township 10 north, range 3 east of the Indian meridian, in Pottawatomie County, Okla., heretofore reserved for public school indemnity lands in said Territory, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the board of education of the city of Shawnee, in said county and Territory, for public school building and public school site purposes, or either of said purposes, as may be deemed by said board of education best suited to the interests aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the said board of education shall, before taking possession of said tract of land, make satisfaction with the lessees for their crops, for all improvements placed thereon by them, and for the unexpired terms of their leases, out of funds to be contributed by popular subscription for that purpose: Provided, That in case the said board of education fails to agree with said lessees upon the value of their crops, their improvements, and their unexpired leases, said board is hereby authorized to condemn their interests in the same in like manner as lands are condemned for the use of railways under the provisions of article 9, chapter 17, of the statutes of Oklahoma, 1893.

SEC. 3. That no indemnity shall be allowed to the said Territory on account of this grant, and the said board of education of the city of Shawnee is hereby authorized and empowered to sell and convey the said quarter section of land, in subdivisions or otherwise, and at public or private sale, as the said board of education may deem best: Provided, That no part of said quarter section shall be sold at a rate of less than $100 an acre for the entire tract.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection by three Members to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior in a letter states that the Commissioner of the General Land Office calls attention to the fact that legislation of this character has never heretofore been enacted by Congress, and that the passage of this bill would be a distinct departure from the policy heretofore pursued by Congress in the matter of land grants. It seems to me that unless there in some special reason for it it ought not to be passed without consideration.

Mr. WANGER. I would ask, what is the exceptional character of this legislation?

Mr. MANN. I really am not able to go into the matter with the gentleman except that the Commissioner calls attention to the fact that it is an entirely new departure in the matter of making land grants.

Mr. WANGER. It seems to me that it is, Mr. Speaker. It involves the question of voluntary contribution and adjustment of outstanding claims, when ordinarily their settlement is asked at the expense of the public Treasury. It is most extraordinary that the citizens of Oklahoma should propose to settle outstanding claims without a charge on the Federal Treasury; and I submit that however novel the experiment may be, if that is the only exceptional character of the proposed legislation it might be wise to try the experiment.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps it might be wise, Mr. Speaker, to try the experiment, but it does not seem to me that Congress ought to inaugurate a new policy without full consideration with reference to such matters.

Mr. WANGER. Inasmuch as the Delegate from Oklahoma [Mr. MCGUIRE] is not present, I would ask that the bill might be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to its being passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] asks that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM B. TODD.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2138) for the relief of the estate of William B. Todd, deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to refund to the administrators of said estate the amount found to have been erroneously collected therefrom on account of an excessive special assessment levied against lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, in square 1040, in 1871, the said special assessment having been revised and reduced in accordance with the revising acts of Congress, with interest at 6 per cent per annum from the date of said erroneous collection to the date of said refund, and a sufficient amount of money to pay the principal and interest of the aforesaid is hereby appropriated, one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to pay a special assessment rebate, and one that has been before Congress a great many times, sometimes with a favorable report and sometimes with an adverse report. It also provides for the payment of 6 per cent interest on this old claim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the small number present I would ask that the case be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO PAWNEE, OKLA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22543) granting to the town of Pawnee, in Pawnee County, Okla., certain lands for park, educational, and other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the town of Pawnee, in Pawnee County, Okla., for park, educational, and other public purposes, all of that part of section 32, in township 22 north, range 5 east, Indian meridian, in said county, described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 32, in township 22 north, range 5 east, Indian meridian, in said county; thence running due east on the north line of said section 32 forty-four one hundredths chain, more or less, to the west boundary line of the Morris road; thence in a southwesterly direction along the west boundary line of said Morris road 16.25 chains; thence west parallel with the north line of said section 7 chains to a point; thence in a southwesterly direction parallel with the west line of said Morris road and 7 chains distant therefrom to a point in the center of the main channel of Black Bear Creek; thence in a southwesterly direction following the center of the channel of said creek to the dividing line between the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of said section; thence north on said dividing line extended to the north line of said section, the same being the place of beginning; and the said lands hereby granted being a portion of the Pawnee Indian Reservation set apart for agency and school purposes at the Pawnee Agency in said county under act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, as amended by act of Congress approved February 28, 1891, and in accordance with the instructions from the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs dated March 17, 1891, the said land hereby granted to said town of Pawnee being subject to the rights of way of the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company and the Arkansas Valley and Western Railway Company heretofore acquired.

SEC. 2. That the said lands are to be held and used by the said town of Pawnee for park, educational, and other public purposes: Provided, That the board of trustees of said town may authorize the board of education of said town to use the same for the erection and maintenance of school buildings thereon and the necessary grounds for use in connection therewith: Provided further, That said city shall pay $1.25 per acre for said land.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MAHON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 10.

Mr. MAHON. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that a quorum is not present. A quorum not being present, the doors will be closed. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill; as many as are in favor of the engrossment and third reading of the bill will as their names are called answer "yea;" those who are opposed will answer "no;" those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 6, answered "present" 51, not voting 178, as follows:

YEAS—143.

During the roll call,

Mr. MAHON said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. CAPRON]. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be allowed to make a statement.

Mr. MAHON. I have no bills on this Calendar, and never had any, but I have consulted with gentlemen who are largely interested in bills which are on this Calendar. They say that they want this order to go ahead. If they do, I am content. It is nothing personally to me. Besides, I am told that a large number of the membership of the House are at a banquet to-night, and I do not want to bring them here. I move that the call of the House be dispensed with. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, we do not understand the gentleman's proposition over here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the further calling of the roll be dispensed with, for reasons stated by the gentleman.

Mr. MAHON. And that the point of no quorum be withdrawn.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether by unanimous consent, after the absence of a quorum is disclosed and the roll call has been commenced, it can be dispensed with?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion and is advised that such a disposition of the matter in the middle of the roll call is not permissible under the rules of the House, and therefore the roll call will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can we not do anything by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the Chair inform the House at what point we can get rid of this dilemma in which we find ourselves?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is not possible under the present condition until a quorum is developed.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. By unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it will take the House to decide the matter now pending, and it is now developed that the House is not present. The roll call is proceeding to determine whether or not the House is present. As soon as that condition is developed, then it will be for the House to take such action as it desires.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I thank the Chair for the information, depressing as it may be.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Rule XV, under which the House is now proceeding, provides for two forms of the call of the House. Under clause 2 there would be no question but that every Member brought into the House should come to the bar of the House——

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is addressing the Chair——

Mr. HEPBURN. One at a time.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order. We have no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair assumed that the gentleman from Iowa was later coming to that point.

Mr. HEPBURN. To the point of the quorum, Mr. Chairman! Under clause 2 there can be no question but that any Member brought in here would be under arrest and would have to be excused by the House. It may not be so plainly stated under clause 4 that this would be the procedure, and yet I am satisfied that it is, because in both instances we find that the word "arrest" is used.

Mr. LEGARE. I move that the gentleman have leave to print. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. This is important, Mr. Speaker, because I see here to-night a very distinguished gentleman, who works in very many fields of usefulness, always wisely and to the advantage of the House, who, during the past session, has devoted himself largely to securing the attendance of Members. He has gone so far, I think, as to introduce a bill providing penalties for those who, by failing to appear promptly in their seats, retard the public business.

The SPEAKER. Upon this vote the yeas are 143, nays 6, present 51, a quorum.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HARRY A. YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 7550) for the relief of Harry A. Young.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Harry A. Young shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the military service of the United States, in the office of assistant surgeon of the battalion of Utah Light Artillery, with the rank of first lieutenant, on the 18th day of January, 1899, and to have held said office and rank until he was killed in action on the 6th of February, 1899: Provided, That no pay, bounty, compensation, or allowance shall accrue to said Harry A. Young by virtue of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOWELL of Utah, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LARVAN GORDON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5869) for the relief of Larvan Gordon.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to confirm homestead entry No. 24813, made to the Camden, Ark., land office by Larvan Gordon, of Dial, Howard County, Ark., and cause a patent to the land embraced within said entry to be issued to said Larvan Gordon, provided there is no valid adverse claim for such land.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRANK J. LADNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20490) for the relief of Frank J. Ladner.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Frank J. Ladner be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter, at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, in virtue of his and his ancestors' long settlement and valuable improvements thereon, the following-described lands, to wit: Lots 1 and 8 of section 3, and all of section 2 except 78 acres on the eastern border of said section, in township 8 south, range 14 west of the St. Stevens meridian, in the State of Mississippi, containing an area of 640 acres, more or less, located in Hancock County, said State, and upon payment of said sum a patent shall issue in favor of said Frank J. Ladner.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the word "ancestors'" and insert "assignor's."

In line 7 strike out the words "Lots 1 and 8 of section 3 and all of section 2 except 78 acres on the east border of said section" and insert in place thereof "Section 13."

In line 11, after the word "Mississippi," insert the words "being the land shown on the plat of official survey, approved December 9, 1829, as the private land claim of John B. Lardner."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some information on this bill.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, John B. Lardner was the holder from the Spanish Crown of 640 acres of land when the United States purchased that territory as a part of the Louisiana purchase, and it provided the means for the confirmation of these grants. Lardner appeared and furnished this commission with evidence of his title, and his possession of the grant was reported for confirmation. It was surveyed and comprised 640 acres of land, laid out to him by the deputy United States surveyor. Lardner always claimed that the first survey was correct.

I should state that the land has been in actual occupation of the persons for whose benefit this bill is introduced as grantees for nearly, if not quite, one hundred years, the occupation of the land antedating the American possession. A short time after the first survey a second survey was made which shifted these lines somewhat in order to include Lardner's improvements, but really it left them out. The patent was issued according to the lines of the last survey, which this old creole ignored. Some years ago the persons to whom he sold—he is dead now—discovered that they had no patent for their land, and application was made to Congress.

It has been reported on three times by the Land Office, on each occasion favorably, and once the recommendation was made that the patent to the land be granted without payment. In the other cases it was recommended that the patent be granted on payment of $1.25 per acre, the usual price of land in that vicinity. Now, in that connection the latest report from the Land Office is under date of to-day, which I will put in the RECORD. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 28, 1907.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a report of the 27th instant by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on amended H. R. 20490, entitled "A bill for the relief of Frank J. Ladner," in which report I concur.

Very respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1907.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I am in receipt, by your reference of this date, for early report in duplicate, with return of papers, of amended House bill No. 20490, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, which reads as follows:

"A bill for the relief of Frank J. Ladner.

"Be it enacted, etc., That Frank J. Ladner be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter, at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, in virtue of his and his assignor's long settlement and valuable improvements thereon, the following described lands, to wit: Section 13, township 8 south, range 14 west of the St. Steven's meridian, in the State of Mississippi, being the lands shown on the plat of official survey approved December 9, 1829, as the private land claim of John B. Lardner, containing an area of 640 acres, more or less, located in Hancock County, said State, and upon payment of said sum a patent shall issue in favor of said Frank J. Ladner."

The bill, except in one particular, viz, that provision is made for payment for the land, is identical in its provisions with H. R. 9747, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, and H. R. 3843, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, reported on by this Office July 7, 1898, and February 9, 1903, respectively, and describes the land involved as was suggested in said reports.

A copy of the report of February 9, 1903, is incorporated in House Report 6589, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, accompanying the bill. This office has received no additional information relative to the claim since said report of February 9, 1903, was made, and as suggested therein, will offer no objection to the bill in case the Congress deems the claim of Frank J. Ladner an equitable one and worthy of favorable consideration.

This report is made in duplicate, as requested, and all papers are returned.

Very respectfully,

W. A. RICHARDS, Commissioner.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOWERS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WILLIAM N. HUGHES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5660) for the relief of Capt. William N. Hughes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Capt. William N. Hughes, United States Army, retired, detailed July 14, 1902, for duty at East Florida Seminary, Gainesville, Fla., shall be held and considered as having been detailed under the act of November 3, 1893.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM MITCHELL, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8791) authorizing the Secretary of War to recognize William Mitchell, deceased, as having been a member of Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, civil war:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to recognize William Mitchell, deceased, as having been a member of Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, civil war, from the 25th day of August, 1863, up to his death, which occurred the 18th day of September, 1863.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to declare that a man was mustered into the Army, but who, whatever the equities of the case may have been at the time, was never in the service of the United States. To pass the bill would be to open a precedent to put into the service of the United States, and thereby put them upon a pensionable status, everyone who ever did anything in behalf of the Union. I ask that the bill go over.

The SPEAKER. Do two others object?

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is it permissible to reserve the right to object?

The SPEAKER. For five minutes. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be heard?

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee. I desire to make a statement of the facts in the case, Mr. Speaker. This report shows that Mitchell was enlisted. He joined the Army, joined the company, but before he got to the place of rendezvous to be mustered in they were run upon by a set of Confederate guerrillas and this man, with others, was killed. This bill is only to give him a military status. Those are the facts.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER] will permit me, I will say that I was a member of the subcommittee that investigated that case and of the committee that reported it. The facts are as he stated. This man was on the way to be mustered in when he was killed at Carthage, Tenn.

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee. He had enlisted. He had joined the Army. The captain who was making up the company had taken his name.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the facts as disclosed by the report in the case are that this man intended to join a company. There was no company organized at the time. He did not join the company. He intended to join the company, according to the report. To allow him in is to let a very large class in.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the captain had the soldier's name, together with the names of ninety-nine other men.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman from Kentucky has not read the report, and I have.

Mr. JAMES. If I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER] correctly, the facts are as I have stated.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken about there being ninety-nine other men.

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kentucky misunderstood me. I did not state that. The captain was making up the company.

The SPEAKER. Do two others object?

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

Mr. GREENE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BIRCHIE O. MAHAFFEY, JOHN A. CLEVELAND, AND TRAUGETT F. KELLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23630) authorizing the President to nominate and appoint Birchie O. Mahaffey, John A. Cleveland, and Traugett F. Keller as second lieutenant in the United States Army.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Birchie O. Mahaffey, John A. Cleveland, and Traugett F. Keller as second lieutenants in the United States Army.

With the following amendment:

Line 7, after the word "Army," insert the words "notwithstanding the bar of age."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOULDEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LOUISIANA MOLASSES COMPANY, ETC.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24833) for the relief of the Louisiana Molasses Company (Limited) and the Louisiana Distilling Company.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the vinegar factory of the Louisiana Molasses Company (Limited) and the distillery of the Louisiana Distilling Company, both situated in New Orleans, La., and having their respective premises separated from each other by a distance of only 425 feet in a direct line, may, to avoid special hardship to the proprietors of said premises, both continue to be operated as now situated and in like manner as they have been operated for seven and one-half years past in the belief that the premises were duly separated according to law, notwithstanding that the said premises are not distant from each other full 600 feet in a direct line as required by the general statutes in that regard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN CROWLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16740) to place John Crowley on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill is to place on the retired list of the Navy a man who retired before the act authorizing the retirement pay went into effect. If this bill should pass, every man who retired previous to that time will be placed on the list.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there a third objection?

Mr. MAHON. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MAHON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ANNULLING CERTAIN TITLES TO LAND ACQUIRED BY JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES IN TEXAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24466) to annul certain titles to lands acquired by judicial proceedings in the courts of the United States in Texas, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there is a Senate bill, 8427, that was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims. I ask that the Senate bill be taken up in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate bill will be read. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Private Land Claims from the further consideration of the Senate bill and consider the same at this time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 11th day of December, 1873, the United States obtained judgment in the circuit court of the United States sitting at Tyler, Tex., in the then western district of Texas, for $50,000, against William T. Scott, William Umbdenstock, and others, sureties on the official bond of Davis B. Bonfoy, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Texas, cause 1037, and it appearing from the facts that on the trial of the cause against the said sureties they were deprived of their defense by having, through mistake, presented their accounts and facts in favor of Davis B. Bonfoy, their principal, then deceased, to the wrong accounting officer at Washington, D. C., for his action thereon, and said accounts were returned by said officer to the United States attorney representing the Government in the cause without any action thereon, which fact was not known to the defendants until they had announced themselves ready for trial; and

Whereas facts subsequently discovered show that at the date of said judgment Davis B. Bonfoy, as collector aforesaid, was not really indebted to the United States, which facts could not have been known at the time to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, for the reason that the money belonging to the United States in the hands of Bonfoy at the time of his death were taken charge of by the military authorities of the United States then commanding at Marshall, Tex. (the State being under military rule), and returned to and accounted for by said military authorities to the War Department instead of the Treasury Department; and

Whereas since said money so returned to the War Department has been taken up by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department in a readjustment of the accounts of the said Davis B. Bonfoy as collector, and it appearing from said last adjustment, including the newly discovered funds in the War Department, that at the time said judgment was obtained against said sureties Bonfoy really owed the Government nothing, but in fact had a balance due him from the Government: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States hereby relinquishes to the heirs or legal representatives of William T. Scott, late of Scottsville, Harrison County, Tex., and to his assigns, all the right, title, and interest, real or pretended, of the United States in and to fifty-two sections of land of 640 acres each, aggregating 33,280 acres, lying and being situated in the counties of Tom Green, Mitchell, Concho, Irion, Coke, Sterling, and Atascosa, in the State of Texas, which said lands were bought in for the United States by Stillwell H. Russell, then United States marshal for the western district of Texas, at a public sale made by him, the said Stillwell H. Russell, United States marshal, on the first Tuesday in October, 1878, under and by virtue of an alias pluries execution, dated June 10, 1878, issuing out of the circuit court of the United States on said judgment obtained by the United States in a circuit court of the United States sitting at Tyler, Tex., in the western judicial district of Texas, on the 11th day of December, 1873, against William T. Scott and others as sureties on the bond of Daivis B. Bonfoy, collector aforesaid, cause 1037, and levied on said lands on the 5th day of September, 1878, and by him as such marshal, following the statute in such case made and provided, deeded to the United States in a deed bearing date December 9, 1878, and recorded in Tom Greene County, in Book C of deeds of said county, folios 128 to 138, inclusive; and that all the right, title, and interest of the United States, real or pretended, to said lands be, and the same are hereby, as fully and thoroughly divested out of the United States as if no such judgment had ever been obtained.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to inquire what committee reported this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Judiciary Committee reported the bill to the House.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. A private land-claim bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. This was a claim held on a judicial decree of the court that carried it to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman from New York I have examined the claim somewhat carefully. The reason it went to the Committee on the Judiciary was on account of action taken by the Department of Justice. The report on the bill is taken on the recommendation of several Attorney-Generals, including practically the present Department of Justice, of course not the present Attorney-General.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill (H. R. 64466) was ordered to lie on the table.

HAROLD D. CHILDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22027) to place Harold D. Childs on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The Clerk read the substitute amendment, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Harold D. Childs, late midshipman, an ensign in the United States Navy, and to place him upon the retired list as such, with three-fourths the pay of his grade.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to have some explanation on this.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is another bill to put a man on the retired list who is not entitled to go on the retired list, to allow him three-fourths of pay, when, under the law, he would receive only one-half. It seems to me we have run the limit——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

LYMAN W. WENTWORTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9892) to correct the military record of Lyman W. Wentworth.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lyman W. Wentworth shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged from the military service of the United States on the 21st day of September, 1899, as a member of Company M, First Regiment California Infantry Volunteers, by reason of disability resulting from wounds and sickness incurred in line of duty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are two or three bills like this upon the Calendar. There are many thousands of such cases in this country, and if this bill passes we will be called upon to pass thousands more. The only purpose of the bill is to permit a man who has an honorable discharge to have it recite he was discharged for disability in order that he may get a Government position ahead of other people, and I object.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there a third objection?

Mr. MACON. I object.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

JOSEPH Y. PORTER.

The next business upon the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5365) to appoint Joseph Y. Porter a lieutenant-colonel and deputy surgeon-general and to place him on the retired list of the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, Joseph Y. Porter, late a captain and assistant surgeon of the United States Army, to the position of lieutenant-colonel and deputy surgeon-general, and to place him on the retired list of the Army without pay as of that rank, and the retired list is hereby increased for that purpose only: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments, either heretofore or hereafter, shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM PEACOCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14133) for the relief of William Peacock.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is just the same kind of a bill. And to show how it goes, the only reason given in this report is that a similar bill was passed sometime ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. FINLEY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CHARLES A. GOING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17013) for the relief of Charles A. Going.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the disqualification of Charles A. Going to enter lands under the homestead laws in force in the Territory of Oklahoma and applying to lands opened to settlement in the Pawnee Indian Reservation, in the said Territory, arising by reason of the said Charles A. Going having heretofore entered a homestead in the State of Kansas, be, and the same are hereby, removed, and that the entry of said Charles A. Going of the southeast quarter of section No. 4, in township No. 22 north, of range No. 3 east of the Indian meridian, in Pawnee County Okla., be, and the same is, restored as fully and to all intents and purposes as if the said Charles A. Going at the time of entering said lands had been qualified under the laws of the United States to enter the same.

The following committee amendment was read:

At the end of line 16 add: "Provided, That the said Going shall pay the sum of $1.25 per acre for said land."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

M. I. GALLUPS AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24945) for the relief of M. I. Gallups, R. S. Smith, W. N. Gill, J. A. Weaver, I. S. Cadenhead, Davis Gillenwaters, and John McLemore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas on the 14th day of October, 1895, M. I. Gallups entered as homestead the following-described lands situated in Russell County, Ala.: Southeast quarter of section 35, township 16, range 28, and did on the 8th day of January, 1901, make final proof of his improvement and residence on the land as required by law, and did on the 13th day of December, 1901, receive a patent to the land from the United States;

Whereas on the 30th day of September, 1895, Robert S. Smith entered as homestead the following-described lands situated in Russell County, Ala.: Northeast quarter of section 35, township 16, range 28, and did on the 23d day of November, 1900, make final proof of his improvement and residence on the land as required by law, and did on the 4th day of December, 1901, receive a patent to the land from the United States; and

Whereas on the 1st day of August, 1897, John McLemore entered as homestead the following-described lands situated in Russell County, Ala.: Southeast quarter of southwest quarter, section 35, township 16, range 28, and took up his homestead and residence upon said lands and lived thereon continuously until the 25th day of March, 1901; and

Whereas on the 5th day of May, 1896, William N. Gill entered as homestead the following-described lands situated in Russell County, Ala.: South half of northeast quarter and north half of southeast quarter, section 33, township 16, range 28, and took up his homestead and residence on said lands and lived thereon continuously until the 25th day of March, 1901; and

Whereas on the 11th day of December, 1895, Davis Gillenwaters entered as homestead the following-described lands situated in Russell County, Ala.: South half of southeast and southeast quarter of southwest quarter, section 33, township 16, range 28, and took up his homestead and residence on said lands and lived thereon continuously until the 25th day of March, 1901; and

Whereas on the 5th day of May, 1896, Ivey S. Cadenhead entered as homestead the following-described lands situated in Russell County, Ala.: Southeast quarter of northwest quarter and north half of southwest quarter and southwest quarter of southwest quarter, section 33, township 16, range 28, and took up his homestead and residence on said lands and lived thereon continuously until the 25th day of March, 1901; and

Whereas on the 28th day of October, 1895, James A. Weaver entered as homestead the following-described lands situated in Russell County, Ala.: East half of northwest quarter and southwest quarter of northwest quarter and northwest quarter of southwest quarter, section 25, township 16, range 28, and took up his homestead and residence on said lands and lived thereon continuously until the 25th day of March, 1901; and

Whereas on the 25th day of March, 1901, these parties, the said M. I. Gallups, Robert S. Smith, John McLemore, William N. Gill, Davis Gillenwaters, Ivey S. Cadenhead, and James A. Weaver, were sued out of possession of said lands by C. H. Dudley, who had purchased the lands from the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company, whose title was founded upon an act of Congress granting said lands to said railroad company, but which land grant had been held by the Department of the Interior as forfeited, which ruling was held by the Supreme Court of the United States to be erroneous, and upon the strength thereof said above-named persons, who had made homestead entries, were ousted; and

Whereas these parties above named lost their land and homesteads and their improvements, houses, fences, and labor for five years: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That each of said persons be, and he is hereby, entitled and authorized to select and receive patent for an equal quantity of unappropriated nonmineral public lands subject to homestead entry without any requirement of previous residence thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill how it happens to come from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. CLAYTON. It was brought about as the result of a lawsuit in which these parties lost their lands, and I suppose it is for that reason. Having grown up out of a lawsuit, the merits of this case went to the law committee of the House.

Mr. LACEY. Some judge being responsible for the loss of it, it went to the Committee on the Judiciary for relief?

Mr. CLAYTON. I can not say that.

Mr. LACEY. Now, I would ask the gentleman if any investigation has been had as to the facts, from the records of the Interior Department, recited in this preamble?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir; and I can state to the gentleman that I have ascertained those statements to be true.

Mr. LACEY. There is no report from the Land Office. Of course, this bill ought to have gone to the Committee on Public Lands, but I am not disposed to object if the facts as stated have been established before the committee.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is all a matter of public record, and the facts were so stated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was stricken out.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STEPHEN THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3863) to correct the military record of Stephen Thompson.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MANN. This bill was probably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by an error. The report recites that when the man was discharged the surgeon certified that it was not a case for a pension and that the man should be discharged without bounty or a pension, it being probably a case of fraudulent enlistment, and he was discharged by the commandant-general without a bounty, and that is all the report discloses. So that probably is intended to be an adverse report, and I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ALLEN of New Jersey. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

W. D. CLAY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 22182.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That William D. Clay, James W. Clay, and Maggie Click, heirs of James W. Clay, deceased, be, and they are hereby, authorized to select in lieu of lands heretofore erroneously patented by the Government to their father, James W. Clay, and lost by said heirs, any other 80 acres of nonmineral, unappropriated surveyed public lands subject to homestead entry: Provided, That before making such selection they shall deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a duly executed and recorded quitclaim deed to the United States, conveying only such right and title as the said James W. Clay, deceased, acquired to the east half of the northwest quarter of section 16 township 6 south, range 3 east, in Alabama, by virtue of a patent issued to him for the said lands on the 2d day of April, 1857, and surrendering such patent to the Secretary of the Interior if in their possession, or filing with him an affidavit that they are unable to procure said patent, if such is the case, and shall file an abstract and affidavit showing that they, or James W. Clay, the patentee, have never conveyed to anyone the title derived from said patent: Provided further, That the right of selection of lieu lands provided for above shall be exercised within five years from the approval of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PATRICK NADDY

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20128) to complete the naval record of Patrick Naddy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to so amend the naval record of Patrick Naddy, late first-class boy, United States Navy, on United States receiving ship North Carolina and U. S. S. Galena and Princeton, as to show him honorably discharged, to date from June 30, 1863.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 7 strike out the word "honorably."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CALDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GERMAN BARK MARIECHEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25437) to grant an American registry to the German bark Mariechen.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25437) to grant American registry to the German bark Mariechen.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation be, and he is hereby, authorized to register as an American vessel the German bark Mariechen: Provided, however, That such registry shall not give to said vessel the right to engage in the coastwise trade.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

And this act is recommended favorably for passage based upon the express condition that said bark is to be used as a barge, and that no application shall be hereafter made for the right for said vessel to engage in the coastwise trade for said vessel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the amendment. It is to be supposed that the amendment recommended by the committee shall accomplish some purpose, but it reads, "And this act is recommended favorably for passage based upon the express condition that said bark is to be used as a barge," etc. Now whatever was intended to be done by the committee, certainly it could not be accomplished by the words "this act is recommended favorably for passage," upon a certain condition, which will certainly not accomplish what is desired.

Mr. MANN. You ought to strike out the words in line 7, "recommended favorably for passage."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no objection to having these words stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now the gentleman offers an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment by striking out of line 7 the words "recommended favorably for passage."

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Also amend by striking out at the end "for said vessel," which is a repetition.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the last three words in the amendment "for said vessel."

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WEBB C. MAGLATHLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6729) authorizing the President to appoint Webb C. Maglathlin a second assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint Webb C. Maglathlin a second assistant engineer in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service upon the occurring of the first vacancy after the passage of this act in the grade of second assistant engineer in said Service: Provided, That the said Webb C. Maglathlin passes satisfactorily the physical examination required by the regulations of that Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I would like to inquire if this would interfere with the promotion of an officer now in the service?

Mr. MANN. I see that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] is present.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, this is a case where a young man passed the professional examination and was recommended for appointment. He stood at the head of the list. At that time he was well within the limit of age, which was fixed at 28. He was not needed then. Before taking the physical examination Congress passed a law fixing 26 years as the limit, and then he was over age. This is a specially exceptional case, and requires action. The service is in need of this man, and he is recommended by the Treasury Department; and I will say the bill has the unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MAHON. He went through the cadet service.

Mr. HULL. How old is he now?

Mr. LOVERING. Twenty-seven.

Mr. MAHON. His appointment will not interfere with anybody else?

Mr. LOVERING. Nobody else is on the eligible list.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOVERING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MARTHA SANDERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23988) to authorize a patent to be issued to Martha Sanders, widow of Levi B. Sanders, for certain lands therein described.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23988) to authorize a patent to be issued to Martha Sanders, widow of Levi B. Sanders, for certain lands therein described.

Be it enacted, etc., That the entry of Levi B. Sanders of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 28, township 18 north, range 25 west, fifth principal meridian in the Harrison land district, in the State of Arkansas, held for cancellation by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and ordered canceled by the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same is hereby, allowed and permitted to remain of record as of the date of said entry, so that title to said land may inure to the benefit of Martha Sanders, widow of the said Levi B. Sanders, and her grantees, as far as she may have conveyed the same, and that patent for said lands be issued to said Martha Sanders, widow of said Levi B. Sanders.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That if satisfactory proof be presented to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that said Martha Sanders has conveyed said land, the patent herein authorized to be issued to said lands shall be issued to the present owner of the land holding and claiming under her.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it as accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS F. WALTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 4964.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 4964) for the relief of Thomas F. Walter.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to review the record of Thomas F. Walter, late first lieutenant of Company A, Ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to revoke the order of courts-martial promulgated in orders dated April 16, 1865, and grant to him an honorable discharge as of the date of his separation from the service: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will read from the report, which states all the facts much more briefly than I could:

This officer had a very honorable service from the date of his enlistment, in August, 1861, up to the date of his separation from the service, in April, 1865. He was but 19 years old when entering the service. During this service he was captured while serving as a volunteer in a perilous trip from near Warrenton, Va., into Snickers Gap, in the Blue Ridge, and passing through the enemy's lines about 30 miles. He was in prison at Winchester, and in a march of nearly 100 miles to Libby Prison "got away on a 'flag-of-truce boat' and returned to the front without waiting to be exchanged."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for an explanation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the President himself endeavored to correct this man's discharge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANNA JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25697) granting land to Anna Johnson.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill to the same effect, which came over to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Private Land Claims from further consideration of the Senate bill and consider it in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. LACEY. This bill should have been sent to-day to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MANN. It seems to have been sent to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. LACEY. The Senate bill has not yet reached the committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 8580) granting land to Anna Johnson.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue to Anna Johnson, wife of Ging Sing, alias Jim Johnson, a patent to the following-described land, to wit: The southwest quarter of section 29, in township 13 south, of range 3 east of the New Mexico principal meridian.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, that should be "range 25" instead of "range 3." I move that as an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 strike out "3" and insert "25."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the similar House bill was ordered to lie on the table.

COMMANDER WILLIAM WILMOT WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25179) transferring Commander William Wilmot White from the retired list to the active list of the Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, William Wilmot White, now a commander on the retired list of the Navy, a lieutenant-commander on the active list of the United States Navy, to take rank next above Lieut. Commander Emil Theiss, United States Navy: Provided, That the said William Wilmot White shall be carried as additional to the number of the grade to which he may be appointed under this act or at any time thereafter promoted: And provided further, That the said William Wilmot White shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to back pay of any kind.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, was read:

After the word "kind," in line 2, page 2, insert:

"And provided further, That the said William Wilmot White shall pass a physical examination before said transfer showing his fitness to enter the active service of the Navy."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the Navy Department has disapproved of this bill, and recommends that it do not pass. It sets forth the reasons in the report. For that reason I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there a second objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there a third?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I object.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, am I not entitled to make an explanation? The Navy Department does not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Gentlemen may object after that if they desire to do so. It is nothing to me.

Mr. MANN. Are we required to wait five minutes before we object?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to five minutes' explanation.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the Department——

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry. Must we object just at the end of the five minutes, losing the right if we do not?

The SPEAKER. The House has been proceeding informally, without objection, in the nature of unanimous consent; but under the order the gentleman is entitled to five minutes before the objection comes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this transfer from the retired list to the active list is requested by the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy. It is true that the Bureau of Navigation does not approve it, because it does not desire, as stated in a letter written to the Naval Affairs Committee, to set a precedent. I will inform the House that the precedent has already been set during the present session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, this officer is one of about thirty or forty left of the old engineers of the Navy. Last year or the year before he went upon the retired list, taking advantage of the personnel act of 1899, and was promoted to the rank of commander. He has now consented to go back and take his place in the line with the rank of lieutenant-commander. His transfer will not interfere with the promotion of anyone. My friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will notice that this transfer, if made, demotes him from the rank of commander to the rank of lieutenant-commander. I hope the gentleman will not object. The passage of this bill is requested of the Naval Affairs Committee by the Bureau of Steam Engineering.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of the Navy disregarded the recommendation of the Bureau of Steam Engineering and followed the recommendation of the Bureau of Navigation and that he says—

> Concurring in the views of the Bureau of Navigation, as above set forth, the Department does not commend this measure to favorable consideration.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is true

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then is it not a fact, as I asserted, that the Department does not recommend this bill for favorable action?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I suppose, considering all these bureaus as part of the Navy Department, and the Secretary of the Navy speaking for them, that perhaps the Navy Department does not approve of the transfer; but the Bureau of Steam Engineering, to which this officer belongs, most urgently recommends, for the good of the service, that this man may go back and take his place in the line and go to sea. I ask my friends on the other side not to object. There is nothing personal in this. I am endeavoring to get a man from the retired list back on the active list. This will be a saving to the Government and will place on one of our great ships an engineer of the highest skill and possessing great intelligence for his profession. I appeal to my friends not to object.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman really think we ought to pass a bill of this sort, against the recommendation of the Navy Department, against the recommendation of the Bureau of Navigation, and not with a favorable recommendation, but only a half-hearted suggestion from the Bureau of Steam Engineering?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I will say to my friend that the Bureau of Steam Engineering most urgently requests the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANN. It only says:

> So it seems but just to him that he should be restored to his former position in the service.

There is no recommendation contained in the report. If there was any such recommendation, it ought to have been printed in the report.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is the language used by the Bureau of Steam Engineering:

> As these officers are fast disappearing from the list, the Bureau feels that in the near future it will be embarrassed for lack of officers with sufficient experience to do the work of design and inspection of new vessels as well as the necessary work on shore at navy-yards. As this officer's record is most excellent and his professional ability well recognized, also as he is an active worker and comparatively young for his place on the list, it is believed that it will be advantageous to the naval service to retain his services as long as possible.

I ask my friend not to object.

Mr. MANN. That certainly is not a recommendation for the passage of this bill. I said they had regarded it favorably, but they did not recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The Bureau of Navigation does not recommend the passage of the bill, but the Bureau of Steam Engineering has urged us by communications and otherwise that the bill be passed.

The SPEAKER. The five minutes has elapsed. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. BELL of Texas. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

MYRA CLARK GAINES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5437) for the relief of the heirs of Myra Clark Gaines, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the heirs of Myra Clark Gaines, deceased, late of the parish of Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, land scrip for 38,457 acres of land in lieu of 39,737 arpents of land to which the said Myra Clark Gaines was entitled as legal representative of Daniel Clark under a grant made by Spain to Thomas Urquhart, being claim No. 2 in House Executive Document No. 60, Forty-third Congress, first session, and in lieu of 5,470 arpents of land to which the said Myra Clark Gaines was entitled as legal representative of Daniel Clark under a grant made by Spain to John Lynd, being claim No. 6 in the said House Executive Document No. 60, Forty-third Congress, first session, the said scrip to be receivable in payment for the public lands, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, in the same way that military bounty land warrants are now receivable in payment for the public lands: Provided, That the said scrip shall be received by the said heirs in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims of the said Myra Clark Gaines, deceased, arising out of the said grants of Spain to Thomas Urquhart and John Lynd.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if this is the old Gaines claim, so familiar to everybody who was an adult twenty-five years ago. I believe it has gone through all the courts, and I think they decided invariably against the claim of these claimants.

Mr. LACEY. No; it was decided the other way; and I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like an explanation.

Mr. LACEY. It was decided the other way shortly after the gentleman from Iowa was born, and has been awaiting the action of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, complying with the request of the gentleman from Iowa, I will make a brief statement of this bill. It is indeed a very old claim. In November, 1803, the intendant-general of the Spanish province of West Florida granted to Thomas Urqhart 50,000 arpents of land—and an arpent is equivalent to seven-eighths of an acre. In 1806 the same grantor conveyed to John Lynd 5,470 arpents of land. In 1803 Thomas Urqhart conveyed this land so granted him to Daniel Clark, and in 1812 John Lynd also conveyed to Daniel Clark. In 1803, under the treaty between France and the United States, the United States acquired a claim to the territory within which this land is situated. Spain also claimed the land by treaty of Ildefonso, of 1800, by occupancy, having established military posts and garrisons. These claims were disputed claims between the United States and Spain and France and between the United States and Spain, and remained unsettled until 1819, when there was executed the treaty of amity settlements and limits between the United States and Spain.

By the terms of that treaty the United States recognized in some sense the title of Spain to these lands, and agreed to confirm the grants of all titles similar to this grant. It would seem that this treaty would have been sufficient to confirm the title of Daniel Clark to these lands. But in 1829, after years of litigation in the courts, Justice Marshall held in an opinion in Foster and Elam v. Neilson, in the second of Peters, 396, that it involved a political question, and that inasmuch as the United States had, by the act of 1804 and other acts of Congress, asserted claim of title to these lands under the treaty with France that Congress was the proper forum to grant relief to Daniel Gaines or his heirs.

In 1860 Congress passed a law pursuant to these decisions, providing for the confirmation of these claims and for the relief contemplated by this bill if the lands had been disposed of by the Government. Five years were allowed in which to present claims under the act. The civil war came on and no applications were made under that act, but in 1867 the term was extended three years. Myra Clark Gaines, as the heir of Daniel Clark, presented her claim to the Commissioners of the consolidated land office at New Orleans within the period fixed by the statute of 1867 extending the limitation of the act of 1860, and these Commissioners proceeded to confirm her claim. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, Willis Drummond, rejected the claim and refused to confirm it for several reasons relating to the evidence, claiming that certain necessary evidence did not appear in the record.

This evidence was subsequently supplied, and it was made to appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the Land Office that the claim was just, and he stated in a report to this Congress that if that evidence had been before his Office at the time he first passed upon the matter the claim would not have been rejected by him, but would have been confirmed. It is claimed, and the record shows, that the evidence was filed with the commissioners at New Orleans, but through some oversight of those officers it was not certified to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington. The United States Congress subsequent to that time has had bills pending before it for the greater part of the time. It is a singular fact that the Committee on Public Lands of this House has repeatedly favorably reported this legislation.

There has never been one unfavorable report made on this bill by the House. It passed the House in the Forty-sixth Congress, if I remember correctly, and went to the Senate, but the committee of that body made an adverse report on the ground that the claim was not presented within the limitation fixed by the statute of 1867, and so no action was taken in the Senate, but the record shows conclusively that the claim was presented in December, 1869, and within the three-year period fixed by that statute of 1867. In 1886, I think it was, Myra Clark Gaines, the heir of Daniel Clark, died, and from that time for a period of ten years no action was taken before this body. Since that time bills have been continually pending before the Committee on Public Lands, and subcommittees have been appointed to consider the bill during every Congress. A subcommittee at the present session took the matter up and had very extended hearings.

I wish to say for myself and my colleagues on that subcommittee that we started into the investigation of the claim with the assumption that the doctrine of laches, or limitations, ought to apply; but after a careful consideration of the matter we have come to the conclusion that instead of being negligent in the prosecution of this claim Daniel Clark and his heirs have been singularly persistent in pressing their claims. They have gone to the courts, and they have come to Congress, and it is true that almost one hundred years have passed since the cause of this litigation has arisen; but the committee was of the opinion that the claim was meritorious, and that the bill ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The five minutes have expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the value of this land scrip?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. One dollar and twenty-five cents an acre.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What would the total be under this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The total appropriation carried by the bill——

Mr. FITZGERALD. About $45,000?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Something more than that, if I figure it correctly. There are about 38,000 acres.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard a moment.

The SPEAKER. But the five minutes have expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

JOSÉ MARCH DUPLAT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution 92 to authorize the Secretary of War to permit José March Duplat to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit José March Duplat, of Venezuela, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby; and that the said Duplat shall agree to comply fully with all regulations for the police and discipline of the United States Military Academy; that he shall be studious, and that he shall give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction: And provided further, That, in the case of the said Duplat, the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be suspended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire how many foreigners are now being educated at West Point?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I think there are some five or six altogether. This resolution comes from the State Department, from the War Department, in the usual form, applied for by the Venezuelan Government, and costs our Government nothing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think, under the present relations with Venezuela, we ought to grant this?

Mr. HULL. It is a courtesy we have never refused any of the South or Central American republics, and I think it is certainly a desirable thing to do in order to make them feel better toward us.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

SETH DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25801) granting an honorable discharge to Seth Davis.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Seth Davis shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as first lieutenant Company E, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, on April 23, 1866, and that the Secretary of War shall issue to him an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DAVID ROBERTSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4089) to place David Robertson, sergeant, first class, Hospital Corps, on the retired list of the United States Army.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in consequence of the long, faithful, and meritorious services in the United States Army of David Robertson, sergeant, first class, Hospital Corps, for a period of fifty years in the same grade, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to place said David Robertson on the retired list of enlisted men of the Army with full pay of his grade and commutation of allowances at the following rates per month: Clothing, $4.56; rations, $30, and fuel and quarters, $20.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is an adverse report, but nobody will endeavor to pass the bill to-night. This bill is on the Calendar on an adverse report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois object.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I will not take one-fifth of five minutes. I just desire to say that of all records made in the service here is the record of a man who has served fifty years in active service, a man who besides that is recommended that this action be taken by every major-general in the United States Army living to-day, by the Secretary of War, and by, I think, fifteen brigadier-generals now in command of the Army or recently retired, so it seemed to a considerable number of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs that it is one case where we might except the usual rule that is adopted by the committee and allow this action to be taken. I believe the man is one of the most worthy men in the United States service or has been, and I hope this vote will carry unanimously.

Mr. PARKER. Can I say a word to the House in favor of the report of the committee?

Mr. MANN. Is the right to object reserved?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the right to object is reserved.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to say that the committee stood about 8 to 6 on this question, eight voting against David Robertson and six in his favor.

David Robertson has served fifty years as hospital steward. He has done his work exceedingly well. At the same time, during the whole war he remained at the forts near the city of New York and saw no active service. If he had been in active service, probably he would have been commissioned and retired at high pay. There is one thing about this man: He has the greatest number of reports, recommendations from Army officers, from the Secretary of War, and major-generals down, but with them there is usually a letter directed to somebody or other asking for it. It is against the rules for one to apply for favors except through regular military channels, and the committee, on the whole, did not like communications from pharmacists and others throughout the country, and that kind of thing, when asked for by the man himself to get a favor in this way. Now, in the third place, there is a precedent in this House. This is not the only case. In 1896 a bill for Frank Marshall, who served thirty-five years as head pharmacist in the Army, was passed. I argued in favor of its passage. It was argued in this House for two days and then was voted down, I think, by a vote of 60 to 24 in the House. We feel very sorry, and I feel a great respect for the man, but the majority of the committee could not feel that an exception should be made in this case. The Navy pay their pharmacists of like standing $1,600 a year, whereas the Army pays but $59 a month. There is much to be said in favor of raising the pay of Hospital Corps sergeants of experience, both on the active and retired list. It ought to be provided for by general law, but if the House, as a matter of equity, should give this relief, I am the last man to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CONVEYING LAND TO NORTH DAKOTA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6134) providing for the conveyance to the State of North Dakota of certain tracts of land for the use and benefit of the North Dakota State Historical Society.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow Milton Lowrie, of Mandan, N. Dak., who on July 25, 1904, made homestead entry of the south half of the northwest quarter and the north half of the southwest quarter, section 13, of township 138 north, of range 81 west, North Dakota, to amend said entry by relinquishing to the United States the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 13, and taking in lieu thereof the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 13.

SEC. 2. That, subject to rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the owner in fee simple of lots 3 and 4 of section 13 of township 138 north, of range 81 west, west of the river, in the State of North Dakota, containing 35½ acres, may convey said land to the United States and select in lieu thereof lots 1 and 2 and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 24, same township and range, and receive patent therefor.

SEC. 3. That when the United States shall have acquired title as aforesaid to said lots 3 and 4 and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 13, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patent to issue to the State of North Dakota for said described tracts for the use and benefit of the North Dakota State Historical Society, conveying to said State all the right, title, and interest of the United States therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRONNA, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HEZEKIAH DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21091) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to enter on the roll of Capt. Orlando Humason's Company B, First Oregon Mounted Volunteers, the name of Hezekiah Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of giving to the widow title to the arrears of pay due the soldier for his services in the Oregon Indian war of 1855 and 1856, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter on the roll of Capt. Orlando Humason's Company B, First Oregon Mounted Volunteers, now on file in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, the name of Hezekiah Davis, and such entry shall show that the said Hezekiah Davis was enlisted as a private by W. H. Farrar at The Dalles, Oreg., on the 1st day of March, 1856, and was discharged on the 19th day of May, 1856, as shown by the original roll and records on file in the office of the adjutant-general of the State of Oregon.

SEC. 2. That when the name of Hezekiah Davis has been entered on the roll of Captain Humason's company, as authorized and directed, his widow, Elizabeth C. Davis, shall be granted the pay due said soldier for his services in the same manner as such claims are granted to the widows of Indian war volunteers whose names now appear on the original company rolls and records of the various Indian wars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that on all the several bills where the motion has not been entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the several bills were passed be laid upon the table.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, F. W. Benson, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that the annexed page contains a full, true, and complete copy of House joint memorial No. 5 adopted by the house of representatives of the State of Oregon February 18, 1907, and by the senate of the State of Oregon February 20, 1907, original of which memorial was filed in this office February 21, 1907.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 21st day of February, A. D. 1907.

[SEAL.] F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

House joint memorial.

To His Excellency the President of the United States and the honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, most respectfully represent that a large number of settlers have settled upon the public domain of the State of Oregon and have been residing upon their claims for many years, and that applications have been made for surveys of such lands.

That the settlers upon such lands are undetermined as to what course to pursue as to the improvement of their claims, and, as they are located far back from settlement, they can not make their entire living upon their claims, and many of them, because of the uncertainty of receiving patent to the land in compensation for their labor bestowed thereon, are leaving their claims and improvements, which are at once scripped by persons who have no interest directly in the development of the State's resources. The scrip holders do not desire that the lands be surveyed, or, if surveyed, the survey accepted, for the reason that the same will be brought under our taxation laws, and are thereby keeping from taxation large tracts of the public domain.

Therefore your memorialists most respectfully ask that the Congress of the United States take some steps to relieve the settlers upon such lands, and where surveys have been made that the same be speedily accepted, and open up the same for settlement.

Adopted by the house February 18, 1907.

FRANK DAVEY, Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 20, 1907.

E. W. HAINES, President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) House joint memorial No. 5.

F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present concurrent resolutions of the legislature of the State of North Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The concurrent resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution offered by Mr. Cashel.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas the valley of the Red River of the North is by nature one of the best, if not the best, of the river valleys of the American continent from an agricultural standpoint, but is at times from a combination of conditions so flooded, both by the overflow of the Red River and its tributaries and by the run-off of the higher lands lying adjacent to and on both sides thereof, and the raising of crops adjacent to the river is to a certain extent uncertain and hazardous; and

Whereas the people residing in the said valley are in the most urgent need of aid for the drainage of their lands in order that crop raising may be assured, and also of the regulation of the flow of the Red River for the purpose of insuring and improving its navigability and the prevention of overflow which results in great damage to life and property; and

Whereas numerous surveys and investigations of portions of this valley have been prosecuted in the past, both in the United States and in Manitoba; and

Whereas the officers of the United States Agricultural Department, in cooperation with the proper officers of the various States affected, are at the present time engaged in making a detailed study of the said valley in the United States, and the engineers of the public works department of Manitoba are also engaged in the study of the drainage conditions prevailing in the said valley in that province, all of which investigations and study are being carried on with the greatest possible speed consistent with careful study and the funds available; and

Whereas there still remains much to be done before there can be a full and complete understanding of the situation: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That liberal appropriations be made for the prosecution of these surveys by the departments of the Government having the same in charge, to the end that the data required for the proper drainage of the Red River Valley and the regulation of the flow of the Red River may be secured. Be it further

Resolved, That we earnestly and urgently request the government of Canada and the Congress of the United States to secure the appointment of an international commission as early as possible for the purpose of making a thorough investigation of the Red River and its tributaries, with a view of regulating the flood flow thereof, so as to prevent its overflow in the times of flood and improve navigation in periods of low water. Be it further

Resolved, That the extensive drainage projects now being carried on throughout the valley, and which will materially affect the volume of water in said river in the flood period, make it imperative that the flow of this river be regulated as far as possible, with a view to meeting the conditions created by these improvements. Be it further

Resolved, From estimates made by the Government engineers and local engineers it is apparent that the waters of the Red River can be controlled by the construction of a canal connecting Lake Traverse with the Big Stone Lake, thereby lowering the water level of said Lake Traverse and turning the flow from its basin into the Minnesota River in flood time, and by the construction of a reservoir dam at Otter Tail Lake, a reservoir dam at the foot of Red Lake, a reservoir dam on the Sheyenne River at some feasible point, to retain the waters of its basin during flood periods, and a dam on the Pembina River, suitably located to control the floods of that stream, which drains from a large area in Manitoba and North Dakota. By the construction of these dams and reservoirs the damage from overflow of the Red River would be averted and navigation materially improved in low stages of water. From investigations and estimates made by competent engineers the proposed improvements can be constructed at a cost not to exceed $500,000. Be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from the States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota be requested to use all earnest endeavors to have a joint commission appointed, and that an appropriation be made sufficient to defray the expenses thereof; and that the government of Canada be requested to cooperate in the appointment of such joint commission. Be it further

Resolved, That the legislative assembly of the States of Minnesota and South Dakota, the legislature of Manitoba, and the parliament of the Dominion of Canada be respectfully requested to consider these resolutions and to cooperate, through their representatives in their respective lawmaking bodies, in carrying out the object sought in these resolutions; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to forward certified copies of these resolutions, one each to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the three States named, the speaker of the legislature of Manitoba, the presiding officer of the Dominion parliament at Ottawa, Canada, and the Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

R. S. LEWIS, President of the Senate.
JAMES W. FOLEY, Secretary of the Senate.
TREADWELL TWICHELL, Speaker of the House.
P. D. NORTON, Chief Clerk of the House.

I, James W. Foley, secretary of the senate, do hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution originated in and was adopted by the senate of the tenth legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota, and was concurred in by the house of representatives.

JAMES W. FOLEY, Secretary of the Senate.

STATE OF WYOMING.
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, William R. Schnitger, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed has been carefully compared with the original copy of house joint resolution No. 7, of the ninth State legislature of Wyoming, relating to the management of the lands in the State by the State land board, and is a full, true, and correct copy of same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 25th day of February, A. D. 1907.

[SEAL.] WM. R. SCHNITGER,
Secretary of State.

House joint resolution No. 7.

In opposition to any proposed change in the Federal land laws or in the administration of said laws, or to any regulations that will operate to the injury of the State of Wyoming, retard its development, hinder its growth, or interfere with the prosperity of its people.

Whereas 60 per cent of the lands of Wyoming are unoccupied, except for the grazing of live stock; and

Whereas conditions in Wyoming were never more prosperous than at present, and it should be our aim to maintain same; and

Whereas the relations between the various live-stock interests were never more peaceful and satisfactory than now; and under present methods of conducting the live-stock industry, necessitating, as it does, winter feeding, the irrigable lands are being reclaimed and made to produce their full capacity of hay and small grains, thereby offering inducements to settlers and dry farmers, and creating a home market for the fruits of their labors, which will grow rapidly under a continuation of these conditions, thereby almost doubling the stock-carrying capacity of the arid ranges and thus increasing, to a marked degree, the taxable wealth of the State; and

Whereas the influx of home builders, homesteaders, and settlers under our irrigation system was never greater or as steady as at present, and the prospect for the future was never brighter in our young Commonwealth. The Government is constructing two great irrigation systems in this State, and soon the farmer and home builder will be invited to come in large numbers and settle the lands under these enterprises; and

Whereas experiments in dry farming have proved conclusively that a large percentage of arid lands heretofore regarded as fit only for the limited grazing of live stock can be reclaimed by the dry-farming methods and made to produce bountiful crops of hay and grains common to this climate; and efforts are now being made to settle these lands by this plan, which has already proved successful: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the ninth legislature of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That we view with alarm any proposed change that will in any way injure our prosperity, restrict immigration, keep out the home builder, homesteader, and settler, retard the growth of our young State, handicap work upon the great irrigation enterprises of the Government and private capital, restrict or destroy the home market of the small ranchman, dry farmer, and settler, who depends upon the live-stock industry for an outlet for his hay, small grains, and produce, or that will in any way interfere with the present peaceful relations between stockmen. Be it further

Resolved, That we favor such changes as will place all such lands under the control of the Commissioner of Public Lands, by direction of the State land board in the respective States and Territories. Be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, and to Members of Congress of the United States, with the request that same be given careful consideration before entering upon any plan having for its object the leasing or control of the range lands of Wyoming.

Approved February 20, 1907.

Mr. WARREN presented petitions of sundry ranchmen of Phillips, Meriden, La Grange, Manville, Guernsey, Sunrise, and Frederick, all in the State of Wyoming, praying for the enactment of legislation providing that actual settlers may lease the Government land contiguous to their patented land; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back the resolution referred to that committee on the 18th of February.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CARMACK (for Mr. MORGAN) February 18, 1907, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is requested, if it is not incompatible with the public service, to inform the Senate whether the Government has information as to any concession from King Leopold of Belgium, as sovereign of the Kongo Free State, to any company or syndicate of citizens of the United States for the gathering of india rubber within the area of the territory of the Free State of the Kongo, located at the mouth or along the banks of the Kassai River, from its junction with the Kongo River southerly into the rubber forests or areas of that part of the Free State of the Kongo.

And that he inform the Senate of the names of American citizens to whom such concession has been made, and as to the territorial boundaries thereof, and as to the terms thereof, and as to the rights, privileges, and powers given by such concession to such company or syndicate. And also as to what powers are given by such concession to such company or syndicate to exercise government or control over the native people of such area, either separately or in cooperation with the government exercised by King Leopold over the Free State of the Kongo. And that the President inform the Senate whether the company or syndicate, as above referred to, has submitted its concession to the Government of the United States for approval or disapproval, and whether the same has been approved.

And also that the President is requested to inform the Senate whether the Government has any information as to the exclusive concession of a right to gather rubber in the forests of Liberia has been made by the Liberian Government to a British company or syndicate, and the terms and conditions of such concession, and to what extent the same has been or is being executed.

Mr. MORGAN. I will not ask for the present consideration of the resolution, as some Senators desire to examine it more carefully before it is acted upon by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. I have here a statement of my own, signed by myself, for which no other Senator is in any wise responsible, and which I desire to have printed in the RECORD in support of the report I have just made.

There being no objection, Mr. MORGAN'S statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF THE REPORT SUBMITTED BY MR. MORGAN.

It is especially true in the Kongo Free State that by far the greatest asset which nature has placed in possession of the native population is the capacity of that region for producing india rubber. The variety of plants from which india rubber is obtained in that country is greater than anywhere else in the world, and the quality of the rubber is unexcelled. It is an industry in that country that is capable of being increased in value by the simplest and most uninstructed forms of labor. No basis of actual civilization is placed in reach of the barbarian tribes of the earth that compares with the production of india rubber, and in the effort to reserve to them the ownership of their native lands and forests no foundation is so reliable as the production of india rubber. It has very suddenly grown to be one of the leading products of commerce throughout the world. It is classed along with wheat, cotton, and wool in its capacity to yield revenue in gold to the simplest forms of human labor and skill.

In every tropical region of the earth the production of india rubber is rapidly becoming the leading industry, and the capitalists of the civilized nations are eagerly pushing into these rubber forests with all manner of monopolistic arrangements for subjecting this great product—the gift of nature—to their craving for wealth. This product, with its accessories of mahogany, ivory, and palm oil, all of them very valuable, is at the foundation of the most arbitrary and unjustifiable usurpation in the Free State of the Kongo that has ever existed in any country or over any people. It has induced Leopold, King of the Belgians, to unite his supposed royal authority and power with his vast private fortune for the purpose of exploiting the lands, the people, and the natural products from the Kongo Free State for his personal emolument. There is really no question that he has accumulated in this way vast sums of money which belong to the people of the Free State of the Kongo. He has been repaid ten times over all the money he ever expended in his efforts to exploit the Kongo country.

He has set apart a very large proportion of this land as a private domain of what he calls the Crown, over which he exercises absolute authority, and he has drawn to himself the support of capitalists and men of power and influence throughout Europe. He has granted concessions of large areas of land to syndicates composed of men of wealth, enterprise, and great political influence. Having thus fortified himself in his aggressions with these extraordinary supports, he has pressed his demands upon the native population of the Kongo Free State and imposed his tasks upon them of personal labor to the extreme of cruelty.

Humanity throughout the world rises in protest against his arbitrary work, and has been already voiced through the resolution adopted by the Senate of the United States.

These concessionnaires of this so-called King of the Free State of the Kongo have been empowered by him to exercise the same distressing authority over the people, which they have proceeded to enforce without restraint and without the responsibilities to public opinion which should check their avarice and greed in dealing with an ignorant and subjugated people.

It is not far to go to get evidence that is conclusive as to the inhuman barbarities that have been inflicted by the ruler of the Free State of the Kongo and the concessionnaires of King Leopold upon these helpless people.

The report of the commission appointed by Leopold to investigate this subject, after full examination, establishes the shocking inhumanity of his conduct and that of his concessionnaires toward the Kongo people. This report, after it was made, was held by Leopold from publication until the public opinion of the world forced him to give it out, and then, through partial translations, it was softened and modified in many particulars, in order to deceive the world.

If we could feel that in respect to the weight, power, and influence of the truth we would be justified in setting aside every report that has been made by the missionaries and by travelers and explorers, and by the consul-general of Great Britain, and treating them as idle and malicious stories, yet quite enough is disclosed in the report of the commission organized and sent out by King Leopold to prove the inhumanity that he and his concessionnaires have inflicted upon these helpless people. There is no plea or apology or excuse that can avoid the naked and rugged truth as it is disclosed in the report of the commission sent out by Leopold. No argument can be adduced to modify or evade the conclusion that the reign of Leopold in the Free State of the Kongo has been personally selfish and has inflicted more terrible inhumanity upon these people than is to be found recorded in any book of history.

It is not now necessary to develop more fully the facts that comprise the history of this inhuman combination to amass wealth from the property, the labor, the sufferings, and the oppressions of the people of the Free State of the Kongo. The case is sufficiently established in the report which King Leopold has at last been compelled to send out to the world, made by his own commission.

The Senate of the United States, with these facts, through its Committee on Foreign Relations, has acted upon the report of Leopold's commission, and also upon the great mass of testimony that is even more reliable which has been presented in memorials to Congress by the Kongo Reform Association and by many other associations and people. This multitude of witnesses adds a crushing weight to the facts disclosed in the report of Leopold's commission. Acting upon this mass of evidence, including the report of Leopold's commission, the Senate has deliberated upon this painful situation and has been compelled to adopt the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the President is respectfully advised that in case he shall find that such allegations are established by proof he will receive the cordial support of the Senate in any steps, not inconsistent with treaty or other international obligations, or with the traditional American foreign policy which forbids participation by the United States in the settlement of political questions which are entirely European in their scope, he may deem it wise to take in cooperation with or in aid of any of the powers signatories of the treaty of Berlin for the amelioration of the condition of such inhabitants."

This resolution is based upon the statement that "it is alleged that the native inhabitants of the basin of the Kongo have been subjected to inhuman treatment of a character that should claim the attention and excite the compassion of the people of the United States."

This basis of humanity has often been considered quite sufficient to excite the Government of the United States to inquire and sometimes to interpose for the relief of oppressed people. In fact, no greater oppression or misfortune has been visited upon any people without attracting either the legislative or diplomatic efforts of the United States Government to minister to their relief. There is no reason why the sufferings of the people of the Kongo Free State should not excite similar attention, when the alleged inhumanity by one who assumes royal authority over them is the motive of our actions. But the real basis of our own action in respect to the Free State of the Kongo and its inhabitants rests upon a moral and national duty that we owe to millions of people in the United States who are of African descent, and to very many of whom the Kongo Free State is their fatherland.

When the Constitution of the United States abolished the slave trade there were hundreds of thousands of negroes in our midst who were held in slavery. Very many of these people were natives of the Kongo Free State, and all of them came from that State or adjoining countries. Laws were enacted by the United States and other nations, and treaties were entered into, that punished the slave trade in the future as piracy.

In pursuance of these engagements, negroes that were captured from slave ships by vessels of the United States were returned to Africa. They could not possibly have been returned to the place from which they had been captured, and the Congress of the United States, acting in concert with the legislature of Maryland, instituted, organized, and put in force, with the consent of the negro chiefs of Liberia, a colony of negroes so captured and of negroes emancipated by their owners in the United States, and matured that colony into a republic whose independence and flag was recognized by all the Christian nations of the earth.

It is not necessary to go through the history of this interesting progress, as the demonstrated result stands forth proudly as the expression of the will of the American people that negroes that had been exiled from their homes in Africa, and were afterwards emancipated from slavery, should have a home on the continent of Africa, to which they could return in peace and without interference from any source. The emancipated negro was regarded as an exile from his home through the operations of the slave trade, in which Great Britain and her American colonies had been active participants, and the world recognized the moral and political right and duty to secure a home to these exiles in their fatherland.

Since the progress of emancipation has removed the bonds of slavery from every person of African descent in the United States, these emancipated negroes occupy justly the same attitude that those held who were captured from slave ships or were emancipated by their owners and congregated in Liberia. The moral duty of returning the exiled negroes to their fatherland, which was so expressly affirmed in our dealings with Liberia, may not be so compulsory or so necessary as the colonization of Liberia was in 1820; but the right of the negro to return to his fatherland, without obstruction from any source whatever, is the right of every exile to return home after his banishment has ended. It is a right that must be exercised freely and voluntarily, and no compulsion of law can be justly exercised over the exile to determine his course of conduct. The emigration on the part of the negro must be voluntary. There are millions of negroes in the United States who earnestly desire to return to their fatherland in the Kongo Free State, and the question is whether any influence or power on the earth or any ruler of the Kongo has the rightful power to prevent his free access to that country and the protection of his natural rights as a human being while residing there.

This question was considered by the Congress of the United States and settled when Mr. Stanley, supported by the enterprise of the New York Herald, had astounded all Europe by the discovery of the sources of the Kongo River, which reaches nearly across the entire breadth of the continent of Africa. America adopted the honor of the enterprise and rejoiced in Stanley's success, while wondering, however, that Europe had so long delayed in making the exploration that Stanley completed. He brought with him a number of treaties made with the kings of African tribes in the Kongo country, probably a hundred of such engagements, all looking to the combination of the numerous tribal kingdoms in a general association or government that would secure the entire watershed of the Kongo River forever to the native people of that country, in whom the sovereignty of that region was acknowledged to reside.

Here was furnished the opportunity to the civilized nations of the earth to dedicate the basin of the Kongo to the sovereign ownership of its native inhabitants, and also to protect them against the still active slave trade that was conducted by Arabs and some Christian nations.

Soon after Stanley's discovery of the Kongo River scientific explorers went into that country and established posts and made treaties of peace with the native kings for the purpose of contributing the results of their explorations to geographers and scientists of all countries. They claimed nothing of the native kings except places of abode and peace and protection, which was heartily accorded to them. A society of this character, called the African International Society, was organized at Brussels. It was constituted by enterprising men, devoted to science, from every European country, and among its most prominent and active members was the honorable Mr. Sanford, of Florida, formerly minister to the court of Brussels from the United States. Through the provision of the International African Society considerable development of scientific and trading posts was made, and a conference or congress of European powers was called to meet at Brussels through the invitation of that society, to take into consideration the interests of Kongo people and to regulate their dealings with the inhabitants of that country. That conference met at Brussels, and the United States was represented in its deliberations. A general act was signed, which embodied the regulation agreed upon, and the United States Government adhered to it as a signatory power. Before that convention met the Congress of the United States took up the question of the future government of the Kongo Basin. This action of Congress resulted in the following declaration by the Secretary of State on the 22d of April, 1884:

"Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State, duly empowered therefor by the President of the United States of America, and pursuant to the advice and consent of the Senate, heretofore given, acknowledges the receipt of the foregoing notification from the International Association of the Kongo, and declares that, in harmony with the traditional policy of the United States, which enjoins a proper regard for the commercial interests of their citizens while, at the same time, avoiding interference with controversies between other powers, as well as alliance with foreign nations, the Government of the United States announces its sympathy with and approval of the human and benevolent purposes of the International Association of the Kongo, administering, as it does, the interests of the Free State there established, and will order the officers of the United States, both on land and sea, to recognize the flag of the International African Association as the flag of a friendly government.

"In testimony whereof he has hereunto set his hand and affixed his seal this 22d day of April, A. D. 1884, in the city of Washington.

"FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN."

Later, in January, 1892, the act signed at Brussels in 1890 was ratified by the Senate as to all parts thereof except such parts of such convention as relate to any interest in the possessions of protectorates established or obtained on that continent by other powers, or any approval of the wisdom, expediency, or lawfulness thereof.

The act of Brussels was signed on the 2d of July, 1890. The act relates chiefly to the suppression of the slave trade, but makes many provisions that are incidental to that general purpose, such as importation of firearms and of spirituous liquors and the protection of liberated slaves in their rightful possessions. There were fifteen signatory powers to that act, including "His Majesty the Sovereign of the Independent State of the Kongo," represented by his minister of state, and the director-general in the department of foreign affairs of Belgium.

In the preamble of this act it is declared that the signatory powers are "equally actuated by the firm intention of putting an end to the crimes and devastation engendered by the traffic in African slaves, of efficiently protecting the aboriginal population of Africa, and of securing for that vast continent the benefits of peace and civilization."

In Article I of the act it is stated that the powers declare that the most effective means of counteracting the slave trade in the interior of Africa are the following:

"Progressive organization of the administrative, judicial, religious, and military services in the African territory placed under the sovereignty or protectorate of civilized nations."

Many other things, including the construction of roads and railways, are enumerated as the purposes that the act is intended to execute; to diminish intestine wars between tribes by means of arbitration; to initiate them in agricultural labor and in the industrial arts so as to increase their welfare; to raise them to civilization and bring about the extinction of barbarous customs, such as cannibalism and human sacrifices; to give aid and protection to commercial enterprises; to watch over their legality by especially controlling contracts for service with natives, and to prepare the way for the foundation of permanent centers of cultivation and of commercial settlements; and protect, without distinction of creed, the missions which are already or that may hereafter be established.

To all of these purposes intended to secure peace, independence, and prosperity to the people of the Kongo and not to rob them of any of their rights, liberties, or possessions, the United States gave its consent for the ratification of the general act signed at Brussels in 1890. Without further enumerating or discussing the other affairs of our relations with the Kongo Free State, and without discussing the declaration of its independence made by Congress, or under the act of Brussels, it seems to be very clear that the Government of the United States has not only the right but the duty in interposing to see that these liberties, benefits, and advantages are secure to the people of the Free State of the Kongo.

Leopold was never made sovereign of the Free State of the Kongo. He certainly is not its king, and he has no sovereign ownership of that great territory and no arbitrary power of government over its inhabitants. The act of Brussels was a contract amongst the great powers of Europe intended to shelter and protect these people in their rights until they could grow up into a condition of wisdom and self-government that would enable them to select their own sovereign ruler. It was a guardianship and was not a transfer of sovereign ownership to Leopold over the Free State of the Kongo.

The negroes of that country have never given their consent in any form to the sovereignty of King Leopold. They are still under the guardianship of the civilized nations of Europe and the United States, and we have a perfect right to ascertain whether Leopold is exercising over them an ownership and a control in the name of law, and of all the productions of the Kongo Basin in the manner described in the various reports and remonstrances that have been sent to the Congress of the United States by our own people.

But there is a still more direct inquiry that the Government of the United States is compelled to make in respect of the conduct of its own citizens in accepting concessions from Leopold of large areas of land in the heart of the Kongo Free State, for the purpose of working the forests for india rubber and other native productions. It is not denied that King Leopold has made concessions to some of our wealthiest and most prominent citizens of a large area of land along the Kassai River for the purpose of producing rubber. This may be a most propitious event for the security and prosperity of that part of the Kongo Free State; but the title that is claimed by his company comes by grant from Leopold, and it at least needs confirmation by the signatory powers to the Brussels act before it can be accepted as a valid conveyance.

No imputation is made against the conduct or purposes of this concessionary company. It is supposed that this company must have communicated so important a transaction to the Government of the United States. If this has not been done, it is the plain duty of the Government to make inquiry as to the extent and as to all the terms and conditions of the grant.

The Government of Liberia, it is asserted on good authority, has made a concession of all of its india rubber and mahogany lands to a British syndicate, and this is a subject into which the United States is in duty bound to inquire. It is the duty of the United States Government to see to it that no barrier or impediment is created by the act of Leopold or by any other authority to debar the exiled Africans who have been held in slavery in the United States from the right to return to their native land and to hold, in company with their kinspeople, the free and unobstructed opportunity to enjoy the great advantages which are now offered to them, and which the United States owes to them of repatriation in their own country without let or hindrance.

The native resources of Central Africa present vast stores of treasure to invite their aid in developing the wealth of that country, and it is time that the United States should interpose its just powers, whatever they may be, in aiding these exiles to establish their sovereign rights in the country that God has given to them.

Reed, now captain on the retired list of the Navy, as commodore on the retired list of the Navy, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DICK. I move the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 1, 1907.

COPIAH COUNTY, MISS.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, yesterday I entered a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill (H. R. 3518) for the relief of Copiah County, Miss., was passed. I also asked at that time that the bill might be recalled in order that the vote might be reconsidered. I now renew the request for the recall of the bill from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, this is a bill that was passed day before yesterday. It is a bill to refund to Copiah County the costs paid in a litigation between the Government and that county, the Government as complainant and the Virginia Bridge and Iron Company as defendant, in a suit that was instituted by the Government for an injunction enjoining the building of a bridge across Pearl River near Rockport. The bill was filed by the Government and a preliminary injunction granted thereon. The injunction was granted by Judge Niles, of the United States district court. After some litigation the injunction was dissolved and judgment rendered in favor of the defendant for the dissolution of the injunction, and not only for the dissolution of the injunction, but for the payment of the costs.

An appeal was taken to the circuit court of appeals at New Orleans. Before the appeal was heard an act of Congress was passed and approved by the Executive authorizing the construction of the bridge, and that obviated the necessity of further litigation. The costs were $164.50.

This bill was introduced in the House and passed the House after the Committee on Claims of the House had carefully considered the merits of the bill, reported favorably to the House, and the House passed the bill some ten days or two weeks ago.

As I stated yesterday, there was no meeting of the Committee on Claims last Tuesday. Only three members of the committee, including the chairman, attended, and the meeting was called off by the chairman. I then asked the consent of the chairman to poll the committee. He stated to me that it was not necessary to get his consent, which I knew already, but I did not intend to poll the committee unless he did consent. He consented to the polling of the committee, with the statement that while he would not object to the consideration of the bill he would oppose the bill. I polled the committee and obtained the consent of every member of the committee who was in the city at the time, except the chairman, to a favorable report of the bill.

The bill was reported, as I stated yesterday, while there was a good deal of confusion in the Senate Chamber day before yesterday when the Calendar was being cleared of unobjected bills. I asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which was given, and the bill was considered and passed by the Senate.

It carries only $164.50. The objection of the chairman is that it sets a bad precedent. I do not think it sets a bad precedent for the Government to pay that which it ought to pay. A very poor man may go into court and lose his case. The costs are adjudged against him and he is compelled to pay not only his own costs but the costs of the opposing litigant. There is no reason why the same rule should not apply to the Government of the United States. If the Government goes in and puts any party, the humblest party in the country, to the expense of litigation the Government ought to pay the costs just the same as anybody else pays it.

The Government does pay for the acts of its officers when people are hurt through the misconduct of its officers. Claims are presented week after week to the Committee on Claims, considered by the Committee on Claims, and reported favorably to this body and passed through the House of Representatives and become laws indemnifying people who have suffered because of the misconduct of officers of the Government. There is no reason why that should not be done in cases of litigation. When a powerful government goes to law with one of its citizens, it does not make any difference whether it is a private individual of the humblest class and standing in the country, or whether it is one of the subdivisions of the sovereignty of the country, as a State or a county, if it loses it ought to pay the costs as anybody else who loses pays the costs.

We go into Cuba and spend millions of dollars that are really unauthorized by law, and that sets a bad example and a bad precedent. We spend millions of dollars for expositions. I heard a discussion in this Chamber yesterday in which it was said a bad precedent had been set in the expenditure of $28,000,000 for expositions. Surely if the Government can expend these sums for the pacification of a neighboring country like Cuba, or for the exposition of the material growth and strength and greatness of the country, it ought to pay this small pittance of a just claim against the Government; it ought not to be repudiated.

Of course if the motion shall prevail, and if the bill shall be recalled from the House, that is an end to it. Inasmuch as it has passed, as many other unobjected bills were passed day before yesterday, and as has been done during the sitting of this and previous Congresses, it seems to me it were better to leave it as it is.

I probably have a little more feeling in this matter than ordinarily, because when I was a young man, only 23 years of age, the county of Copiah gave the casting vote that made me the district attorney of that district, and I feel an interest in their recovering the sum of money which they have expended, and which justice demands shall be refunded. I urge the Senate not to recall the bill from the House.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. PROCTOR. I rise to present the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. PETTUS. I wish simply to ask the Senator from Oregon to state the attitude of the House toward all bills of the Senate allowing claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has risen to present a conference report. After its consideration is concluded the Chair will recognize the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. I will explain the attitude of the committee then.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following report:

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. W. WADSWORTH,
CHAS. F. SCOTT,
JOHN LAMB,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be glad if the chairman of the committee would explain to the Senate the fate of the various amendments that were put upon the bill in the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Rhode Island indicate the amendments in which he is interested?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am interested in the fate of the amendments in regard to the reports of receipts and estimates for expenditures required of the Secretary.

Mr. PROCTOR. All those were kept in, and in one point were strengthened. In the case of the Forestry Service the conferees added also a detailed report of receipts. Everything that the Senate put in was retained in that item.

Mr. ALDRICH. What became of the amendment moved by the Senator from Oregon which was inserted in the bill?

Mr. PROCTOR. That was retained except that the conferees made an addition.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to inquire what became of the appropriation for the Biological Survey and whether it was retained.

Mr. PROCTOR. The provision for the organization was restored precisely as it was last year.

Mr. CULLOM. What about the appropriation?

Mr. PROCTOR. There was no increase in the appropriation. It was left just as it was last year.

Mr. LODGE. I thought that as the bill came from the House the service was retained, but the Bureau was abolished, and the office of Chief of Bureau was abolished.

Mr. PROCTOR. The conferees restored the Bureau.

Mr. LODGE. The Bureau is restored?

Mr. PROCTOR. It is restored just as it was last year. We omitted a clerk or two, I believe, in the way we restored it here.

Mr. LODGE. The Chief was restored?

Mr. PROCTOR. The Chief was restored. The whole organization was restored.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate further insist upon amendments numbered 88 and 90, which were not agreed upon by the conferees and ask for a further conference with the House, the conferees to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator what amendments those were?

Mr. PROCTOR. Amendment numbered 88 is the one relating to agricultural colleges. The other is the matter of the total.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate further insist on its amendments numbered 88 and 90 and ask a further conference with the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. SIMMONS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

COPIAH COUNTY, MISS.

Mr. FULTON. I now renew my motion to recall from the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 3518) for the relief of Copiah County, Miss. Perhaps, in view of what the Senator from Mississippi has said, I should explain briefly the character of the bill and why I wish to have it recalled.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Oregon making an explanation? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. FULTON. It is true, Mr. President, as the Senator from Mississippi says, that the amount carried by the bill is small. But the precedent established by it may lead to very considerable appropriations in the future, and on principle I think the legislation is absolutely vicious. It is against the policy of the Government to assess costs in court cases against the Government, except in some exceptional instances, and I think all will agree that whenever costs shall be charged against the Government they shall be charged pursuant to some general rule established by law, and that the payment of costs ought not to depend upon special legislation in individual cases.

If we are going to charge the Government with costs in every case in which it engages in litigation, we should do so by a general rule that will apply to all litigants alike. We ought not to permit litigants to come into Congress and get through special bills paying costs in special cases, and that is what this bill does.

I do not want to go into the merits of the case at all. It is sufficient to say that, under the general law, litigants can not recover costs, and we ought not to provide for such a recovery by special legislation. Had I been here, I should have objected to the bill when it came up—not to its consideration, but to its passage—but being absent, and being the chairman of the committee from which the bill came—and it came against my protest—I felt it my duty to present the matter to the Senate and ask that it be recalled in order that it may be again considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if this action on the part of the Senate merely recalls the bill from the other House?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It merely recalls the bill from the other House. When the bill shall have been returned the question will be upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. McLAURIN. Can that question be put now, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question can not be put until the Senate is in control of the bill. The bill has passed out of the control of the Senate.

LEGALITY OF BUSINESS DONE BY EXPRESS COMPANIES.

Mr. BURKETT. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas on January 4, 1907, at Kansas City, Mo., the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association, in convention assembled, charged that the American Express Company, Adams Express Company, United States Express Company, Pacific Express Company, and Wells-Fargo Express Company are unlawfully engaged, especially in the West, in the business of buying, selling, and handling on consignment fruit, vegetables, and oysters, thus coming into direct competition with merchants and jobbers engaged in such business; that no such business is contemplated or sanctioned in their articles of incorpoartion, but is contrary to and in violation of the powers legally conferred upon them; that the trafficking in merchandise which they transport is an illegitimate business for express companies to engage in, and is destructive of the legitimate business of fruit jobbers and produce merchants; that it gives opportunity for covering up discriminations, the payment of rebates, and unlawful practices, and that said express companies have increased and are increasing their charges for the transportation of fruits, produce, and other merchandise to an unreasonable extent, to the detriment of growers, shippers, and consumers; and

Whereas the said Western Fruit Jobbers' Association, at the time and place mentioned, by resolutions duly adopted, not only condemned and denounced as injurious and unlawful the contest for business between express companies and merchants engaged in legitimate trade in fruit, produce, and oysters, but demanded that a vigorous and rigorous examination and investigation of the methods and practices adopted and in use by said express companies be instituted by Federal authority, to the end that accurate information may be obtained, abuses and discriminations corrected, and unlawful business prohibited: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to inquire, investigate, and report to the Senate—

First. Whether the American Express Company, Adams Express Company, United States Express Company, Pacific Express Company, and Wells-Fargo Express Company, or either of them, are unlawfully engaged, through their local or other agents, in the business of buying, selling, or handling on consignment fruits, vegetables, and oysters entering into interstate commerce.

Second. Whether such business is contemplated or sanctioned by the articles of incorporation of said express companies.

Third. Whether such business is carried on in violation of the provisions of the act to regulate interstate commerce.

Fourth. Whether the carrying on of such business by said express companies is inimical to or destructive of the legitimate business of fruit and produce merchants and gives an unfair advantage to the agents of said express companies, which is used by them to the disadvantage and detriment of legitimate shippers and receivers of fruit and produce.

Fifth. Whether the carrying on of such business gives to said express companies an opportunity to cover up discriminations, to pay rebates, and engage in other unlawful practices.

Sixth. Whether said express companies have increased and are increasing their charges for the transportation of fruits, produce, and other merchandise to an unreasonable extent, to the detriment of growers, shippers, receivers, and consumers of such fruits, produce, and other merchandise.

Seventh. That the Interstate Commerce Commission be required to make the investigation at its earliest possible convenience and to report the facts and its conclusions thereon, together with its recommendations, as soon as it can be done, consistent with the performance of its public duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to let the resolution lie over for a day, because I wish to point out to him a great many inaccuracies in the statement contained in the resolution in regard to the companies named therein.

Mr. BURKETT. Very well. It is simply a resolution asking for certain information.

Mr. KEAN. Some of the companies to which the resolution refers are not corporations at all; they are not incorporated.

Mr. BURKETT. I am content that the resolution shall lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARK.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I submit the resolution, which I send to the desk, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three members of the Senate be appointed by the President of the Senate to make inquiry and take testimony in regard to the government of the permanent Hot Springs Reservation, in Arkansas, with respect particularly to the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior governing leases of water privileges, use of waters, and registration of physicians, and that it be, and hereby is, authorized to visit Hot Springs, Ark., to send for persons and papers and administer oaths and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as that resolution will involve an expenditure from the contingent fund of the Senate, it will have first to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, the resolution involving certain expenditures, it will be necessary first to have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I thought, as it was a matter relating to the Hot Springs Reservation and the Committee on Public Lands has charge of such matters, that the resolution should be referred to that committee; but the disposition suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire is entirely satisfactory to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

JOHN WALLER.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6104) to reimburse John Waller, late postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for moneys expended in carrying the mails.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John Waller, late postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., $426.25, to reimburse him for moneys expended in carrying the United States mails and for damages consequent therefrom.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL-LAND LOCATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17415) to authorize the assignees of coal-land locations to make entry under the coal-land laws applicable to Alaska.

The bill was up the other day and was passed over, not under objection, but by consent. It is a very important bill, and necessarily will have to be passed with an amendment, and it may probably require a conference. Therefore I hope it may now be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon for the present consideration of the bill named by him?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to have an opportunity to examine the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. NEWLANDS. For the present, I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

CLAIMS OF POSTMASTERS IN THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

Mr. DICK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution No. 171, which was submitted by me on June 29, 1906, with reference to the claims of postmasters in the States and Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have stated in the Sixth Auditor's Office the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, and who applied to the Postmaster-General, prior to January 1, 1887, for payment of increased salary under the act of March 3, 1883, such salary accounts to be stated upon the registered returns of each postmaster for each term of service specified, and by the method and rule laid down by the Postmaster-General for the statement and payment of salary accounts of former postmasters under the act of March 3, 1883, in his public order of February 16, 1884, directing payment of salaries by commissions and box rents, less the salaries paid at time of service; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Sixth Auditor all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every such claim, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to the Senate such stated salary accounts of former postmasters as soon as they can be made ready, not later than the beginning of the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

Mr. DICK. I desire to modify the resolution by inserting, in line 2, on page 1, after the word "stated," the words "and audited;" in line 10, on page 2, after the word "postmasters," by inserting "by States;" in the same line, after the word "ready," by inserting "all claims to be reported;" in line 11, before the word "session," by inserting "first;" and in the same line, before the word "Congress," by striking out "Fifty-ninth" and inserting "Sixtieth."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have stated and audited in the Sixth Auditor's Office the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, and who applied to the Postmaster-General, prior to January 1, 1887, for payment of increased salary under the act of March 3, 1883, such salary accounts to be stated upon the registered returns of each postmaster for each term of service specified, and by the method and rule laid down by the Postmaster-General for the statement and payment of salary accounts of former postmasters under the act of March 3, 1883, in his public order of February 16, 1884, directing payment of salaries by commissions and box rents, less the salaries paid at time of service; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Sixth Auditor all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every such claim; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to the Senate such stated salary accounts of former postmasters, by States, as soon as they can be made ready, all claims to be reported not later than the beginning of the first session of the Sixtieth Congress.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe that resolution covers the whole country, does it not?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; it covers all the States and Territories.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

EDITH A. HAWLEY.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 569) granting a pension to Edith A. Hawley.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut for the present consideration of the bill referred to by him?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill, Mr. President. I wish to say, however, that it can not be discussed under the five-minute rule; but I have no objection to considering it as long as the Senate desires to consider it. It comes from the Committee on Pensions adversely reported.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BULKELEY. I desire to propose an amendment to the bill. In line 9, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edith A. Hawley, widow of Joseph R. Hawley, late a brigadier-general and brevet major-general, United States Volunteers, and brigadier-general, United States Army, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President, I do not desire at this moment to detain the Senate with any remarks unless there is opposition developed to the bill. If there is any opposition, I should like, at a later period, to make some remarks.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is perhaps no question relating to private pension matters that is more important than the question which is raised by this bill. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill has been reported adversely by the unanimous vote, I believe, of the Senate Committee on Pensions. It is well for us to give a single thought to the one object of all special pension legislation.

We have general legislation which provides what any soldier shall receive for any wound; what he shall receive for any disability; what the widow of any officer shall receive, and when and under what conditions a pension will be granted. If, Mr. President, that law is not proper and sufficient, then we should change the law. If the law is proper and just, we should not change that law and for the benefit of a single individual. The object of creating the Pensions Committee, if I understand correctly, was to reach by special legislation those particular cases that could not justly be dealt with under the general legislation. That is its object.

Congress has been accused—I think somewhat unjustly—of applying the special pension provisions so as to benefit particular persons, who, it is said, have "a pull" with some member of the Senate or some Member of the House. It has been the desire and the continued effort of the Committee on Pensions to absolutely repel any such unjust accusation. We have tried to apply the special pension legislation to those cases, and to those cases only, where the party making application could show clearly and distinctly that his or her case was such that great destitution would follow except for special pension legislation.

When the widow of any officer has applied to the Pensions Committee for special consideration we have considered, first, the service of her husband; we have considered, secondly, her own age; and, thirdly, her financial condition. If it were found that her case was not such as would justify the committee in reporting favorably on the ground that destitution would result, except for the action of Congress, we have universally reported the case adversely, or, what is equivalent thereto, we have not reported it at all.

To take up a single case in which there is the least necessity for any legislation by Congress, and make that case a precedent for every other one of the cases that comes before Congress, Mr. President, is to open the door wide for every pension bill that comes before Congress; and if that is to be done we may as well abolish the Pension Bureau and make the Committees on Pensions of the two Houses the Bureau of Pensions for the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I do not know that this matter is of very much moment to the Senate or to Senators. If it is, certainly I should like their attention to this attempt to invade and destroy the rules that have been adopted by the Pensions Committees of both Houses. When we had but a hundred or two or three hundred cases before the committee in a single session, it was probably not necessary to have rules that should govern each case; but when, instead of coming in by the hundred we have before us perhaps from five to ten thousand cases during a session, it is quite necessary that we should lay down some rules to guide us in determining under what conditions and in what amount a pension will be granted in any particular case. We have had to adopt rules, which have been concurred in by both the Senate and the House Committees on Pensions. One of these rules is that an original pension shall never be granted beyond that sum which would be granted by the Department, supposing that death had occurred while the officer was in service. In this case, therefore, under the rules, the greatest amount of pension that could be allowed would be $30 per month.

The second rule, which is the most important of all the rules, is that no pension will be granted where there is not a necessity for a pension. We have turned down case after case where the widow of a soldier showed that she had four or five or six or ten thousand dollars. The statement that comes before us in this case, upon the admitted testimony of the claimant in a letter, is that she values her property at $50,000, much of which is in the stock of the Courant, a paper published in Connecticut, and the value of which, I think, has increased considerably in the last two or three years. But in any event it is admitted in this case that the value of the property is fully up to $50,000, from which there is a constant income, reported by the claimant as being about $2,400 a year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In this case, Mr. President, I was solicited to perform a friendly act; and I wrote Mrs. Hawley, asking her for a statement as to her financial condition, and she wrote me a letter, which I referred to the Committee on Pensions, in which she said that her entire property amounted to $40,000. I will ask the Senator if he has subsequent and different information?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have her letter in which she places it at $50,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply recall the fact——

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it was $40,000 in the Courant, and she had $10,000 in addition that was invested, making $50,000 in all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that, and I wish he would refer to his papers.

Mr. McCUMBER. The papers show that it is $50,000. I have not got them here, because I did not know the case was coming up at this time.

Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the adverse report of the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. McCUMBER on February 20, 1907, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 569) granting a pension to Edith A. Hawley, have examined the same and report:

This bill proposes to grant a pension of $100 per month to Edith A. Hawley, widow of Joseph R. Hawley, late brigadier-general and brevet major-general, United States Volunteers, and brigadier-general, United States Army, retired.

General Hawley was born at Stewartsville, N. C., October 31, 1826, and died in this city March 18, 1905, at the ripe old age of 78 years. He had a remarkable career both in civil and military life.

At the breaking out of the war he entered the Union Army as a captain, and subsequently became colonel and brigadier-general and brevet major-general of volunteers. He was honorably mustered out of the military service in January, 1866.

After the war General Hawley attained a high place in civil life. He became governor of Connecticut in 1866, and in 1872 was elected a Member of the National House of Representatives. He served several terms as a Member of Congress and later as United States Senator from Connecticut, his service expiring March 3, 1905. While a member of the Senate General Hawley served for fifteen years as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and exhibited unusual zeal in behalf of his old comrades.

Immediately after the expiration of his term as Senator he was, by act of Congress, placed on the retired list of the Army with the rank of brigadier-general.

General Hawley did not marry the claimant until late in life, namely, November 15, 1887. She is still in the prime of womanhood, being now about 55 years of age, and in good health. She can obtain no pension under existing laws, hence the effort to obtain one from Congress; and while your committee recognize the distinguished services of General Hawley, they do not believe that they are justified in recommending legislation in behalf of his widow.

It appears that Mrs. Hawley has considerable resources and is a woman of substantial means. According to her own statement she is possessed of $50,000, well invested, yielding her an income of at least $2,400 per year.

Mrs. Hawley therefore has no claim other than the services rendered by her husband, which the citizens of this great country can realize. It has, however, been the policy of your committee to recommend for pension only those cases in which the need for relief is urgent—those cases, in fact, in which the claimants have nothing at all, and are in dependent circumstances. That this is the proper policy for Congress to pursue in the bestowal of its pension benefactions is obviously too true to admit of argument, and that Mrs. Hawley's case is not a proper one for Congressional action your committee believe to be equally well founded.

Mrs. Hawley has abundant means, left her by General Hawley, to care for herself. She is at present living in Europe, and is in no sense in need of any help from the Government.

Without discussing the high rate of pension proposed in the bill it is sufficient to say that your committee believe that it would be a very bad precedent to grant a pension to anyone situated as Mrs. Hawley is. It must be manifest to everyone that to add to the pension roll by special legislation those who are neither sick nor needy would be wholly contrary to the original purpose of the Government in granting pensions to its defenders, and would amount to an increase in the pension expenditures for which there would be no good and sufficient warrant and an injustice to every pensioner who is not the recipient of such special favor.

Your committee have had under consideration many cases far more meritorious than this one, cases in which the soldiers rendered equally long and highly distinguished service in the Army or Navy, leaving widows with considerably less substantial means than are present in this case. From the standpoint of service they possess equal merit and from the standpoint of financial condition they possess far greater merit than does this case. In none of these cases has favorable action been recommended, and to now grant it in the least meritorious case would justly subject not only the committee but the Congress to the charge of favoritism in its pension legislation.

Based upon the belief that this case is not a proper one for the action of your committee, the committee feel constrained to report the bill back adversely with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I presume that only the chairman of the Committee on Pensions can appreciate fully what a precedent means. I can give the Senate some idea of what it does mean. Every one of these pensions is scanned very carefully by every person who thinks that he or she is entitled to more than he or she is receiving from the Government as a pension, and the moment we allow one a greater sum than another receives under similar or like conditions, or the moment we grant to one where we fail to grant to another under like conditions, that moment every other one is before the committee with appeals to be placed exactly in the same position. A great many years ago, Mr. President——

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Does Mrs. Hawley draw any pension at all now?

Mr. McCUMBER. She draws none at the present time.

Mr. MALLORY. Did General Hawley draw any pension?

Mr. McCUMBER. General Hawley did not draw a pension.

A good many years ago quite an excessive pension was granted to Mrs. Logan, the widow of John A. Logan.

Mr. GALLINGER. And Mrs. Frank P. Blair.

Mr. McCUMBER. And Mrs. Frank P. Blair.

Mr. GALLINGER. Two thousand dollars each.

Mr. McCUMBER. Those cases have been brought to the committee again and again and by almost every widow who claims or desires to make a claim for Government assistance. They make it upon the ground that their husbands served as faithfully and were as good officers as the husbands of the widows named—and no one can deny that every soldier did his duty and that every general did the duty prescribed for him to do—and you can not meet those cases by any possibility except to acknowledge that the Senate and the House in their love for this or that veteran have gone beyond what would be strict justice, when we consider all of those who ought to have consideration by Congress.

Mr. President, the widow of the private soldier who married after 1890 receives no pension at all, no matter how poor she may be, no matter how destitute her circumstances may be, and yet we are asked to take up widows of officers, married about the same time—young women, practically, as we regard age in these days—and although they are wealthy as compared with the widows of privates, to give them from fifty to a hundred dollars a month. Every time you do that you do an injustice to every other widow. If we have a hundred soldiers, for instance, under like conditions, each of them entitled to $30 a month, and we raise one of them to $50 a month, by that very one act we are doing ninety-nine cases of rank injustice, and that is one of the things the Congress should guard against committing.

Mr. President, what is the financial condition of Mrs. Hawley? The very least that can be said is that her property is worth $50,000. Whenever the time comes, if it ever does, that the widow of General Hawley is in reduced circumstances to the least extent, then she can come before the Congress, and Congress will do her justice. But so long as there is no necessity for this pension, so long as it can be said that it is given not to meet a necessitous condition, but as a compliment, then let us wait until the claimant comes within the rule. No one will accord to General Hawley a higher rank as a soldier and as a citizen than I, and I am willing that the Senate should pass any resolution it may see fit, emblazoning to whatever extent it desires his virtues and his great generalship and his statesmanship. But if we are going to vote money merely as a matter of recognition of qualities, we can vote the whole Government bankrupt in a very short time.

But the principal objection, the one above all others that I have to urge against this bill, is, first, that there is no necessity of the pension from a financial standpoint. Secondly, it establishes a precedent which the committee would be forced to follow in the future. I have in my committee room to-day a vast number of applications for widows' pensions—widows of officers, widows who feel that the Government ought to support them. We have failed to report those bills favorably, because we felt that by reporting them favorably we would do a great injustice to many other widows who are exactly in like conditions and like circumstances.

At this time I can not fail to mention a growing sentiment in the United States on the part of the widows of officers—a sentiment that seems to be entirely wanting on the part of widows of privates who served the country in time of great need. I speak of it as a growing tendency, because the younger widows—those who have married lately, not the old widows who suffered during the war times, but the younger ones who have married since the eighties and the nineties—seem to feel that the Government owes them a living and should support them and their children absolutely merely because they married Army officers.

I can give an example which would perhaps illustrate this sentiment. Only last winter two women, both widows, came before me to express their feelings concerning the matter of pensions. One of them was the widow of a captain, I think. Proudly she swept up to the committee room and announced that the Government could not expect her to live on $40 a month; that the Government owed her the duty of supporting her and caring for her in the manner in which she has been accustomed to live.

The very same day a poor widow of this city, about 70 years of age, who had received $12 a month by a special pension bill, appeared before me and with tears coursing her old wrinkled face, thanked God for such a glorious and noble Government that would look after the widows of the old soldiers. One of them with a grateful heart for the little $12 per month; the other demanding, as a matter of right, that she should receive more than $40 a month. The one of them poor and needy; the other one in no need whatever. I deprecate the growing sentiment that the moment a woman marries an officer she becomes thereby entitled to the support of the Government of the United States and aid for the education of her children.

I had before me the other day a case where the pension which had been granted under the general law was $30 per month. The letter which came to me from this widow stated—although she was married but a few years ago, being the wife of a soldier in the Philippine war, and had suffered none of the hardships of the old widows of the soldiers of the war of 1861 to 1865—that she thought she was entitled to a greater sum than $30 per month, "because," she said, "I must now send my oldest daughter to school to educate her, and I desire to educate her as an artist." Ah, Mr. President, I thought that this good woman, for a good woman she is, ought to thank her God every morning that she saw the dollar drop into the plate from a generous Government and not expect that Government in addition to look after her and her children exclusively, so that no effort on her part would be required, and the only effort would be on the part of the Government to raise the taxes necessary.

Whenever you raise one of these persons beyond the law rating, I insist you are doing a great injustice to every one of the others. Let us take the case of Mrs. Hawley, a noble, true, generous woman. Fifty thousand dollars constitute her assests, according to a letter which I have. She is not living in the United States to-day. Her home is here, but to-day she is in Europe. She is living in Europe. She is able to travel and spend her summers and winters in Europe, and yet we are asked to appropriate $50 a month for this woman—wealthy from the general standpoint of wealth in the United States—while many of the old women who in the years from 1861 to 1865 took care of their little brood while the husband was in the war, receive the bare pittance of $8 a month. I for one shall never stand for such injustice, not only against every one of the widows of the war soldiers, but an injustice against the American people. It is an injustice whenever you pick out one of these widows and place her upon the pinnacle so much above the others that you must measure her standard by the standard of $50 a month, when there is no necessity for the granting of the pension.

It is easy for Senators to feel that this does not amount to anything; that they will pass the bill in the Senate, and the committee will not be responsible for it. The committee is responsible for every injustice, and no injustice is greater than the injustice of unequal treatment. We are striving for equal treatment. We believe, and I firmly believe, that no person should receive the benefit of a special bill unless his condition is such that he would suffer without it, and that the duty of the Government is to shield these old men who fought for the country during the serious period between 1861 and 1865. I can not stand here and see injustice done to the widow of a single one of these old veterans by picking up the widow of some one, because we loved the general, and placing his widow so much above the others that every one of them can complain, and justly complain, of unjust and unequal treatment.

Mr. CLAPP. Is this subject to the point of order?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I meant to ask if it is not subject to objection to its present consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it is subject to objection as to present consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I want to say——

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to state finally that I will answer any question concerning this matter, but——

Mr. SCOTT. Give me a chance.

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly will. The Senator has never been without an opportunity to express himself so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SCOTT. If objection is to be raised, I will not have the opportunity.

Mr. McCUMBER. Whenever the condition of Mrs. Hawley or the widow of any other general or private who served in the Army is such as to bring her within the rules, whenever it is necessary to guard against suffering in any manner, then she can come, and justly come, before Congress for assistance. But until that condition arises she ought not to come and ask for a pension which is not needed.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the very elaborate remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], especially as he is chairman of the Committee on Pensions. I am glad to know that he has concluded that the proper thing to do is to be just and generous to a class of people in this country who are deserving of pensions. It is only a few weeks ago that I remember be brought in a minority report against a bill which I reported for the Army nurses, trying to get a pension for these grand old ladies who held a cup of cold water to the lips of the dying soldier, were he either Confederate or Union; who took the apron off her body and tied up his wounded limb; who administerd to him on the battlefield, and sent the trinkets which were in his pocket home to the widow; to whom were dictated the last words of the dying boy to his mother. Yet this generous Senator from North Dakota brought in a minority report against pensioning these grand old women, when there are less than 400 of them, and many of them 80 and 90 years of age. I am glad that he has had a reversal of feeling, and that he is now willing to pension these poor widows and these nurses and those who are deserving, although he is not willing to pension the widows of general officers.

Mrs. Hawley has been more honest than a great many widows who have come before the Committee on Pensions since I have been on that committee. She has admitted the amount of property she owns. I have known other widows who, in order to secure a pension, have transferred their property to their daughters or their sons, in order that they might not have the property on account of which the Senator from North Dakota and others would refuse to give them a pension.

General Hawley served his country in the Army. He was a leader in the battles of his country, as much so almost as General Logan and General Sheridan. General Sheridan's widow gets $2,500 a year pension. Mrs. Logan gets $2,000 and has vastly more property than Mrs. Hawley. Mrs. Blair receives $2,000. General Hawley was a member of this body for twenty-four years, I believe. Had he died while a member of this body his widow would have received $5,000. The property that Mrs. Hawley has inherited by the death of her husband is a newspaper publication, and we all know how precarious that is. She has two daughters. Of course those daughters are entitled to one-third each of that property.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that reference is made in the report of the committee to the fact that General Hawley was placed on the retired list by the action of Congress. It is, I think, proper that it should go in the RECORD that he lived only long enough to draw one month's pay under that act.

The Senator from West Virginia will recall the fact, as he doubtless does, that in addition to Mrs. Sheridan receiving $2,500 a year, Mrs. Logan and Mrs. Frank P. Blair receive $2,000 a year each. And if the Senator should go back and examine the RECORD during the time when I was honored by holding the position of chairman of the Pensions Committee—and I think I tried as diligently to do justice as any man ever did in that place—he will find that there are scores and scores of widows of general officers who had no title to pension under the law who were placed on the pension roll at fifty or seventy-five dollars a month—soldiers very much less distinguished than General Hawley was either in military or civil life.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am sure there is not a Senator or a citizen who has read history who is not convinced that General Hawley gave the better part of his life to the services of the Government of the United States, either in the capacity of soldier or legislator. I served with him on the Military Affairs Committee from the time I came to the Senate until he retired from this body. I had hoped when the other day this body was generous and honest enough to forget the past and give the widow of Stonewall Jackson a pension of $20 a month, of which I heartily approved, for his services in the Mexican war, there would not be a voice raised against granting a pension to Mrs. Hawley.

I remember standing over in this grand cemetery of ours at Arlington a few years ago when three hundred and more bodies were brought back from Cuba for interment. The President of the United States and the Vice-President, who is now in the chair, attended. When we looked off and saw that grand monument to the Father of his Country, the beautiful river flowing past to the sea; when we approached these graves, by each of which was standing a casket wrapped with the flag of our country, and looking saw those boys from Texas, and Ohio, and Arkansas, and Maine, and Virginia, then, Mr. President, all the bitter feeling of fraternal strife was wiped out. I hope that this bill will pass without a dissenting voice, and the names of Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Hawley placed alongside each other on the pension roll by the same Congress will show most effectually the era of good will and forgetfulness.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia speaks with some feeling about the minority report upon the nurses' bill which passed the other day. I think the Senator is not justified in the view that he has expressed here on the floor in reference to that bill. My report was based upon a principle on which I am willing to stand and stake my reputation as a man who has sympathy for the old soldier and the widow of the old soldier. I want to tell the Senator from West Virginia that while I reverence the nurse I still reverence the soldier who fought four years, and I considered it an injustice that when the man who stood in the ranks four years and fought was receiving $12 a month the nurse who was there six months should receive $25 a month. I do not stand for such inequality and injustice. When the Senator himself brought the bill down so that the nurses would receive exactly what the soldiers receive at the same age, there was not a voice in opposition to it. That inequality was the only opposition.

Mr. SCOTT. I had to do it in order to get the bill out of the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; for it would have been opposed here. Everyone I think who has a clear sense of equality of treatment would have been opposed to saying that the nurse who served six months is entitled to $25 a month and the soldier who served forty-eight months is entitled to but ten and twelve.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think the Senator wants to be misleading in his argument and to represent that the nurses served only six months. Many of them served three years, the same as soldiers did.

Mr. McCUMBER. The record will show that a great majority of them served one year. That is what the report shows, and the basis of the law is six months' service. They must have served six months in order to draw a pension. When the pension was reduced so that equal justice was done, then there was no objection to it whatever.

Mr. President, the nurses did a great deal for this country in those perilous days, but they did no more than most of the mothers and sisters during that same length of time. I say that the mother who had to bring up during those hard times of the civil war half a dozen little children and care for them while perhaps the only son was away in the Army and the father was away in the Army is entitled to just as much consideration as the nurses of the civil war. It was in behalf of the great army of the widows of the brave soldiers of the civil war that I pleaded against the injustice of holding them down to $8 a month while the nurses were placed at $25 per month. The moment the bill was reduced to what was just and proper it found the unanimous support of all the members of the committee.

The Senator speaks of our pensioning the widow of General Jackson. We did, Mr. President, but how much? Twenty dollars a month, I think it is, or $30. I think we passed it at $30 or more and it was reduced to $20, or it may have been reduced to $30 in the House. I am not certain about that; but what was the showing? The showing before the committee was that she had no property whatever to amount to anything. That presents an entirely different case from that where the widow has half a hundred thousand dollars and is able to travel in Europe and over the country.

Mr. President, I am willing to join the Senate in any memorial it desires to pass as to the character and the services of General Hawley, but I am unwilling to take the widow, not a war widow by any means, but who was married in 1887, I think, and place her so much above all of the other widows of the officers and the widows of the private soldiers in that great struggle for the life of the nation that everyone must necessarily feel, if he has the pride of humanity in his heart, that they have been treated unjustly. And it is an unjust treatment.

Mr. President, I call attention to three provisions in the rules of the Committee on Pensions. I do not know how long these rules have been in existence, but they have been the rules of the committee since I have been a member of it, for at least eight years. Rule 5 reads:

> RULE 5. Bills for increasing pensions which have been granted by the Bureau under the act of June 27, 1890, at less than $12 per month will not be given consideration. The soldier must establish his title to and be granted the maximum rate provided by said act before applying to Congress. If it be shown that a claimant who is in receipt of pension at the maximum rate under that law is in absolutely destitute circumstances, or suffering from a permanent disability of an extreme nature, a bill proposing to grant additional pension may be favorably considered, and if a rejected claim exists under the general law, the equities in the latter claim will receive consideration in connection with the bill.

In speaking of the general law with reference to widows the rule reads:

> No allowance of pension to widows will be recommended above the general-law rating, except in case of destitution or extreme physical disability, to be substantiated by competent testimony, and no original pension will be recommended in excess of the rating provided by the general law for a similar rank.

If there is anything that has been adopted as a rule and which necessarily had to be adopted as a rule, it was the question of destitution. Otherwise, as I have stated, we might as well make the Committee on Pensions the Bureau of Pensions and be done with it. It was intended to cover, I repeat, those cases where the general law, by reason of its generality, would not reach and do justice in specific cases and where great suffering would ensue except for timely intervention by a bill in Congress. Under this rule it has been our custom to require everyone, widows of officers and others, to make a showing before the Bureau, and to make such a showing as that they would be entitled to receive the $12 per month or the $8 per month under the law of 1890. That would establish at least the financial condition of the widows, and having established it in a better manner than we can, beyond any question, that such widow did not have an income beyond $250 per year, we then took up the case and granted the extra amount that would in any way relieve her destitution.

While we have not drawn the line absolutely between the widow of the private and the widow of a general as to what constitutes destitution, the doubts and the differences always being resolved in favor of the widow, that what might be destitution for the widow of the general might not be destitution for the widow of the common soldier, so far as I myself am personally concerned I have tried to make that distinction just as small as possible, and were it in my power I am willing to say that I would make no difference, but that destitution should mean exactly the same in one case that it means in the other.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will occupy a very few minutes' time in the discussion of this bill, which was introduced by the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] on the 5th day of December, 1905, and has been in the Committee on Pensions from that time until a few days ago.

I appreciate the difficulties that the Senator from North Dakota has to deal with in administering the affairs of the committee over which he so ably presides. I was there myself for several years, and I know that it is a difficult and perplexing business.

I want to say, in the first place, that it is a late day for any Senator to argue against precedents in reference to pension legislation. Our statute books are full of acts that are different from all that preceded them, and they make precedents; but we acted upon those, as we thought, wisely, and I am not at all alarmed to-day at establishing a precedent in reference to private pension legislation in this body.

I only wish that this bill might have been brought before Congress at an early day, either adversely or otherwise, so that we might have had some hope of its being enacted into law before this Congress terminates.

It is, Mr. President, a matter of profound regret to me that this debate has occurred. It seems to me that it is a very poor tribute to the memory of one of the bravest soldiers and most distinguished public servants this country has ever known. I think the memory of General Hawley deserves a better fate. But the bill is here, and we have got to deal with it as best we can.

While I was chairman of the Committee on Pensions scores and scores and scores of bills were passed for the widows of general officers at $50 a month, some of them at $75, and some of them at $100 or over. As has been suggested, there are several precedents where we have given $2,000 a year, and in one case $2,500 a year, on no better claim, as a matter of fact, than there is in this case. Those widows had property; but their husbands had rendered conspicuous service to the country, and we recognized it in that way.

I am glad, Mr. President, that the Senator from West Virginia has said a word on this question. The Senator from North Dakota was mistaken when he stated that the Committee on Pensions was unanimous in this matter, because the Senator from West Virginia, himself a distinguished soldier, is a member of that committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. I said I thought they were unanimous, and I corrected it when the Senator from West Virginia said that he was in favor of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am afraid, Mr. President, that this case never was very fully brought to the attention of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the contrary, I want to correct the Senator and state that it was before the committee time and again.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, that is probably so, but my information has been somewhat different from that; but we will let that go. I say I am very glad the Senator from West Virginia, himself a very distinguished soldier, a member of the committee, has spoken with the earnestness that he has, and I am glad that he recognizes that the paltry sum proposed to be given to Mrs. Hawley is only a partial recognition for the services not only that General Hawley rendered, but that she rendered as the wife of General Hawley.

Mr. President, those of us who remember that man—great as a soldier, great as a private citizen, and great as a member of this body during the long term of twenty-four years—those of us who remember that man for the last year of his life as he tottered in and out of this Chamber can well understand what that devoted wife, herself in her early life a trained nurse, did to make his last years years of comparative ease and of comfort.

I know something about it, because I have been in that home. I have seen that woman caring for him on the street, caring for him as she would for a child, and I am not going to stand upon a technicality in this case, nor am I going to be frightened because of a possible precedent that may be established.

When Mrs. Hawley married General Hawley she found one child in the household. She took care of that child as though it was her own. She bore children to General Hawley and cared for them, and she is now trying to care for them; trying to educate them. Who says that that cultured woman, the wife of that great man, should not be placed in a position where she can educate those children and put them in a position in life where they may do credit to her and to her lost husband?

I do not blame the Senator from North Dakota at all for the position he takes if he feels that it is his conscientious duty to do so, but I do say, Mr. President, that we ought to act generously in this matter, and that we ought not to be frightened by any fear of precedents or of doing what the Senator from North Dakota thinks is an injustice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 24816) to amend an act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond, tax free, of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hardly feel justified in having the unfinished business laid aside. I understand that other Senators desire to address the Senate on the pending measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take but a very little while. I am about through.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If the speeches are few and of a brief nature and we can get the unfinished business before the Senate within a reasonable time I will consent that it may be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have but a word to add, Mr. President. The Senator from North Dakota has called attention to the fact that women who married soldiers after the act of June 27, 1890, are not pensionable under that law. That is true, so far as that one act is concerned. They are pensionable under the general law, and we have taken scores and hundreds of those cases and passed special acts in their behalf, and they are on the pension roll to-day.

So this is not an innovation. It is true that the proposed pension is a little larger than has been granted to widows of private soldiers, and why should it not be?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not desire, Mr. President, nor purpose to prolong the debate upon the bill, but it occurred to me that probably I should say a word.

I served for a long while as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs while General Hawley was its chairman. I am personally cognizant of the devotion and care that he received at the hands of his wife during the last years of his life when his condition was especially and peculiarly helpless.

Further, Mr. President, I am prompted by reason of the reflection that General Hawley and myself served on opposite sides during the civil war. I most cordially indorse everything that has been said on his behalf. I agree thoroughly with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and I sincerely trust that the Senate will with the same unanimity with which it passed the bill that made him an exception to the rule in placing him upon the retired list extend the same kindly treatment to the surviving widow.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have only to add, Mr. President, that had General Hawley applied for a pension himself he could have drawn many thousands of dollars from the Treasury of the United States. He did not do that.

Another circumstance worthy of mention is that General Hawley was placed on the retired list and lived to draw only one month's salary. Again, he died very shortly after leaving the Senate. Had he remained here a little while longer his wife would have received the gratuity that is always given by Congress to the wives of deceased Representatives and Senators.

Now, Mr. President, I think the circumstances all justify us in voting for the bill. I should be glad to vote for it unamended, but the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] has moved to reduce the amount from $100 to $50. I trust there may be practical unanimity in passing the bill and doing justice to the devoted woman who gave some of the best years of her life to caring for this man who did such conspicuous service to the country, both on the battlefield and in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I served under General Hawley for a couple of years upon the Committee on Military Affairs, and I want to say in answer to the Senator in charge of the pension bills that this is no extension of the precedent. There is one case that I recollect, where a brigadier-general's widow, married long after the war, without any children by her last marriage, received first $50 and then $75. This is allowed to the widow of General Hull.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, only a word.

I pay to the Senator from North Dakota, chairman of the Committee on Pensions, tribute of my respectful admiration for the manner in which he has conducted the business of that committee. He has given to it not only assiduity, but a large measure of kindliness and justice and the discrimination which he felt the general public interest required. I want to say, in a sentence, that I think there never has been at the head of that committee a Senator whose duty has been more faithfully and ably discharged, and it is in many ways a thankless duty.

Situated as the Senator from North Dakota is as chairman of that committee, dealing, as he is obliged to, with thousands of claims which must be rejected and dealing with thousands which are granted, I can understand that there must be rules limiting the cases in which relief will be awarded and also limiting the amounts to be awarded. I can realize how anxious that Senator is that rules shall be carefully observed and that precedents shall not be permitted to break over them.

But, Mr. President, while the Senator from North Dakota is not only a just man but is a very generous man, he must remember that all rules have their exceptions. While there may be, and doubtless is, more of mathematical reasoning and more of cold logic in the position and discussion of this matter by the Senator from North Dakota than in that of those who favor the bill, nevertheless, upon reasons partly logical and partly sentimental, this exception to the rule ought to be justified.

When I listened to the Senator from North Dakota, whose tribute to General Hawley and his services was a generous one, I could not exclude from my memory General Hawley as I knew him and served with him here. To save my life I could not keep from looking for a face which I can not see and listening for a voice which I can not hear. I saw him again standing in the Senate in his place heard him again pleading in trumpet tones over and over again for relief for the comrades of the war, and their orphans and their widows. He seemed to regard all soldiers of honorable service as his bunk mates almost.

General Hawley was a general officer. He was five years in the Army, and during the five years General Hawley was in the Army, if he had been less patriotic, if he, with his great ability, his positive genius, had remained at home and devoted himself to the upbuilding of a business and to the conservation of purely selfish interests, he would have been a man beyond need for himself or his family ever of anything from the public Treasury.

When I left the Senate in 1891, not having been here long enough to quite disable me from some indulgences, I had three riding horses of which I was fond and which I would not sell, but was quite willing to give away. I offered one to General Hawley. This was long ago, when he was strong, Mr. President, when there was timbre in his voice. A strong, chivalrous gentleman he always was. He thanked me with tears in his eyes, and said to me: "I have not money enough to pay for his keep; give him to some Senator who is able to take care of him."

Mr. President, a private soldier offers his life and so does the general offer his life under the flag. But there is a great difference in the status of the two. The private soldier obeys orders. The general is responsible for the command, for success, and it is impossible and it always has been regarded as impossible to treat the two, each being absolutely meritorious, upon exactly the same basis.

I can not myself forget that during a great many years he served the public here at a salary not in the slightest commensurate with the work which he performed and the service which he rendered.

We gave, as has been stated, to the widow of Gen. John A. Logan, who in addition to long and splendid military service had long service in the Senate, a pension. We have given to the widows of other officers pensions, in exceptional cases, as General Hawley's case is an exceptional one.

The Senator from North Dakota refers to the fact that Mrs. Hawley and the daughters are able to travel abroad and now live in Europe. I doubt not that it is with her as it is with many whom some of us have known, that she lives abroad because she can afford there on smaller income the mode of life to which she has been fairly accustomed, and secure there the instruction required by her daughters which here would be more expensive than she could permit.

I have not been thinking of Mrs. Hawley; I have been thinking of General Hawley; I have been thinking of Senator Hawley; I have been thinking of the splendid soldier, Mr. President, and the loyal, devoted, eloquent, broad-minded Senator; and I would not be willing, if a vote of mine could prevent it, that his widow should be obliged to come here in forma pauperis knocking at the door of the Chamber in which he sat for so many years an honored and faithful Senator. The country owes more than that to the memory of General Hawley for his services in the field in defense of the Union.

Mr. President, his daughters, upon whom he bestowed the accumulated love, which, although it was in his heart for children, had been denied to his home until late in life—we should have some care for them. It is not enough, speaking in such a case and upon such a subject, that they should be decently clad; that they have food. It is due, Mr. President, to the memory of such a man, who rendered so great and long-continued service, that they should be so educated as to fit them for the position to which they were born and in which it was the prayer of his heart they might during their lives remain.

Something has been said about General Hawley being placed on the retired list. I have some doubt if he realized for two consecutive hours that Congress had passed that act, because we all know that the palsy of brain and of body had almost shut him out from keen interest in the affairs of the world.

It is an exceptional case. The American people are a sentimental people, and they will feel, and so will the soldiers feel, and so will the right-minded widows of soldiers feel, Mr. President, that the right thing for Congress, all things considered, is to grant this $50 a month to General Hawley's widow. Some day they will build a monument of marble to him in this capital that will cost twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars. It would be the irony of fate if his memory is so decorated, as it should be, that the daughters of his love should have been wanting in provision for which those of us, however poor we may be, struggle and pray for our loved ones.

There is much in what the Senator from North Dakota says. While his general reasoning is correct and while his attitude justifies no impeachment either of his sense of justice or his generosity, I can not but feel, Mr. President, that this is one of those cases which ought to be regarded as an exception to the rules of the Committees on Pensions of both Houses, which are wise and necessary rules, and that where we have made so many exceptions hitherto we ought not to draw the line on the widow and the orphan children of Gen. Joseph R. Hawley.

I shall vote for this pension, which I understand has been agreed shall be reduced in amount to $50 a month.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] for the kind compliments he has given me. I can not but contrast them somewhat with the statement that was made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT].

Whatever in error may have been done in the Committee on Pensions, it has been an error of the mind and not an error of the heart. If there has been any one thing which I have tried to do justly and rightly, it has been to secure as nearly exact justice as it was possible to secure under the conditions.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. In a moment.

But the effort to secure justice has never been so great as has been the effort to prevent injustice. I have tried to do both faithfully and honestly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have served here on the Pensions Committee, of which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] is chairman, and the report which he has made and the effort he is making, and very properly making, is precisely what I had expected from that Senator in this case, and should expect from him in any similar case. I discovered very early in my service that the Senator from North Dakota had fixed and definite rules for the guidance of his conduct as chairman of the Pensions Committee, and that those rules were based upon his sense of justice. I discovered that whenever any pension bill was under consideration, whether of a public nature or of a private nature, his conduct was always gauged by his sense of patriotism, by a deep tenderness of feeling, but, above all and beyond all, by a sense of justice to all, having in mind the widow of the private soldier as well as the widow of the officer. That he should make this report and say what he has said on the floor of the Senate in opposition to the granting of this pension was what any Senator who has been familiar with the rules of conduct which have guided him as chairman of the committee was led to expect and must have expected.

Say what one will, there is a spice of favoritism in the bill that I expect to vote for. The close association of Senators with General Hawley for so many years, the personal knowledge that they have of his services to the country and of his family relations, do, whether sensibly or insensibly, swerve them in his favor and in favor of the woman, his widow, who survives him. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions, I know much to his regret and to a certain extent doing violence to the tenderness of his heart, has felt constrained that he may be consistent, that no improper precedent may be set to guide or control the future action of the committee or of the Senate, to take the course that he has.

I doubt, Mr. President, if there ever has been a chairman of the Pensions Committee who has served it and served the country more zealously, conscientiously, and justly than has the Senator from North Dakota. It is a great committee. Millions of dollars must be disbursed annually through the action of that committee. New claims will be placed upon the statute books against the Government through the action of that committee; and the Senator from North Dakota has ever realized the responsibilities that have rested upon him by virtue of his position, and has always fearlessly observed those responsibilities, and has endeavored to enforce his convictions upon the floor of the Senate. While in all human probability the sentiment of tender sympathy that pervades this body for such a member as was General Hawley, having in mind his Senatorial services, his services in other civil positions, and his services upon the field, will lead Senators to vote for this bill, it is no reflection whatever upon the Senator from North Dakota; and the action he has taken in opposition meets my entire approval.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I supported the position taken by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. McCUMBER] in committee, and I shall support his position upon the floor.

I believe, Mr. President, we are about to take action that will establish a dangerous precedent. Senators speak of this as an exception—a justifiable exception to a rule—but in matters of legislation an exception often becomes a rule. I think the proper question to be inquired into here, and which should govern every pension case, is whether or not there is such a state of need or destitution as to justify the granting of a pension. Such a condition does not exist in this case. The chairman of the committee has simply taken and upheld the position he has upheld in all like cases.

I want to say, Mr. President, that, as chairman of that committee, the Senator from North Dakota has never, under any circumstances, permitted himself to be guided by mere matters of sentiment and influenced thereby to violate a salutary rule, and if this Senate shall do that in this case, I believe it will simply show that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions is wiser than the Senate.

I know that the chairman of the committee feels just as I do, that if he should be guided by his sentiments and his feelings alone he would vote for this pension. I do not believe, Mr. President, simply because General Hawley was a Senator of the United States and served in this body with Senators who are now here that we are justified in making such an exception in this case. I shall therefore vote against the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, a few sentences will suffice to state my views respecting this bill. There is no rule of the Senate that applies to it. There is a rule observed by the committee for itself which in no wise affects either the right or the propriety of any action which the Senate may deem proper to take.

I regard this not only as an exceptional case, but a rarely exceptional case. General Hawley gave the vigor of his whole life to the service of his country, first in war and then in peace. He was a conspicuous, a brave, and an able soldier, who underwent the hardships of war from beginning to end and brought out of the war an honored and respected name. When the war was over he was connected for many years with most important public affairs, and rendered long, faithful, diligent, and distinguished service.

We are all moved more or less by our feelings and sentiments. I do not think that the world is worse that we are so moved. They introduce into our conduct that equity of consideration that can never be bound up in any ironclad rule.

After being an important figure in a great strife, General Hawley had upon his shoulders, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of this body, a most onerous burden to bear with respect to the Army of the United States, to its organization, and to the many details that apply to military affairs. He had that high and responsible position during the Spanish war, and the labors entailed upon him were as important as they were numerous and heavy. It was within that time, or shortly afterwards, that his health broke down, no doubt in considerable measure from the assiduity and fidelity with which he had discharged his public duties.

Service with him here in the Senate enabled us to be witnesses of the eye and witnesses of the ear and witnesses of the understanding to the great services that he rendered to his people, and if, under the convictions of wisdom and respect, we may be also moved in some degree by our regard for the man, surely it is no offense against any worthy interest of this country or against the best traits of human nature.

But were it a cold proposition, one of mere calculation, according to the facts, which bespeak themselves, this is a rarely exceptional case, which will make no ill precedent if it be applied to cases of the same order and description.

The speech of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] was a noble and worthy speech. It bespoke the just opinions which belong to one who is charged with the duties which he has to perform as chairman of the Committee on Pensions. The concurrence in his opinion of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is of the same order. Sitting as judges on the committee they treat all alike, and having made a rule for themselves they abide it. Their speeches are logical if their premises be recognized. But their rules do not bind us. We are differently situated. I do not recognize that in treating with the concerns of a nation which involve great careers of prolonged, unusual, and extraordinary service you can ever embrace the principles which should govern them in any severe rule, or one that should not properly yield to the dignity of a particular case and of particular service.

I had rather indulged the hope, Mr. President, that this bill might pass with unanimity as a tribute to one who spent his whole life, not in the pursuit of self-advantage, who did not seek the rewards which come from fortune, and who, instead of making money his object, was controlled and governed throughout by a patriotism which is a worthy example to all who may follow him. If the principle which shall rule those of us in giving an affirmative vote to this bill shall be in all cases observed, no harm can befall the Republic.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President, in asking the Senate to take up and consider and pass the bill which is now pending I did not intend to antagonize in any way the general rules laid down by the Pensions Committee for their guidance in the consideration of pension cases. The four or five thousand cases which we have before us at every session of Congress are all special cases and are passed upon by the committee and by the Congress on their merits. The beneficiaries under the pending bill are the widow and, indirectly, the children of the late Gen. Joseph R. Hawley. He was a distinguished citizen of Connecticut in his earlier life. He was the first soldier in Connecticut to sign the roll under the call for troops in April, 1861, and I saw him in the uniform of a private as he entered the ranks in my own State. He was promoted to a captaincy and went into the field with the first company of three-months' troops from my native State. At the expiration of his term of service he returned to his State and immediately reenlisted under the command of our great general, Alfred H. Terry, in the formation of the celebrated fighting Seventh Connecticut Regiment as its lieutenant-colonel, rising from a lieutenant-colonelcy by reason of his merit to the command of his regiment, and afterwards to the star of a brigadier, and then retiring after almost five years of service in the Army in January, 1866, with the brevet rank and the stars of a major-general.

By retiring from military life he never left the public service. He was at once the choice of the people of Connecticut for the governorship of that State. For three terms he was elected to the lower branch of Congress. He was president of the great Centennial Exposition, in Philadelphia, in 1876, and for four terms he served his State and the nation faithfully in this branch of Congress.

The Senate needs no justification, I take it, for the action which I have asked in the passage of this bill. The comrades in arms of General Hawley will need no justification for the action proposed, except his own record in his country's service, which I hold in my hand, as taken from the files of the War Department and furnished me by The Military Secretary. It is a most honorable record of a gallant soldier and of his five years' participation in the great struggle in which the country was engaged from 1861 to 1865, and I ask permission to have it printed in the RECORD, without reading, as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted.

The record referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

Statement of the military service of Brevet Maj. Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, late captain, First Connecticut Infantry; colonel Seventh Connecticut Infantry, and brigadier-general of United States Volunteers.

Joseph R. Hawley was mustered into service at New Haven, Conn., April 22, 1861, as captain Company A, First Connecticut Infantry Volunteers, to serve three months, and was mustered out of service as captain with his company July 13, 1861. Captain Hawley is not reported absent from his command during this service. The regiment was attached to the First Brigade, First Division, Army of Northeastern Virginia.

He was again mustered into service at New Haven, Conn., September 17, 1861, as lieutenant-colonel Seventh Connecticut Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years, and as colonel same regiment to date June 20, 1862. Under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1884, and the acts amendatory thereof, he is considered by this Department as commissioned to the grade of colonel Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, to take effect from May 19, 1862, vice Alfred H. Terry, promoted.

This regiment left New Haven for Washington in September, 1861, and was assigned to and formed a part of the expeditionary corps under Brig. Gen. T. W. Sherman which sailed from Annapolis, Md., in the latter part of October, 1861, arriving at Port Royal, S. C., November 4, 1861.

Colonel Hawley appears to have been present with his command until July 29, 1862, when he was ordered north on recruiting service. He returned and reassumed command of his regiment at Hilton Head, S. C., September 5, 1862, and remained in command of it until September 13, 1863, being for a portion of the time (namely, from May 12, 1863, to about August 18, 1863) also in command of the post at St.

Augustine, Fla., where a part of the regiment was stationed. On September 13, 1863, he was assigned to the command of the Third Brigade, United States forces, at Morris Island, South Carolina, and remained in command of that brigade until October 14, 1863, when his regiment was ordered to St. Helena Island, South Carolina. From October 14, 1863, to February 4, 1864, he was in command of the "post and United States forces" at St. Helena Island. On February 4, 1864, he was assigned to the command of the brigade known as "Hawley's brigade," attached to the Florida expeditionary forces commanded by Brig. Gen. T. Seymour, and thereafter, until September, 1864, held brigade commands (with rank of colonel) as follows:

February 4 to 26, 1864, Hawley's brigade; February 26 to April, 1864, Second Brigade, Ames's division, Tenth Army Corps (this brigade was transferred to Virginia about April 17, 1864); April 23 to May 7, 1864, Third Brigade, First Division, Tenth Army Corps; May 8 to September, 1864, Second Brigade, First Division, Tenth Army Corps. On September 12, 1864, at the request of Gen. A. H. Terry, commanding the division, he was ordered to Connecticut on recruiting service and in charge of enlisted men.

On September 13, 1864, he was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers, to rank from the same date, and accepted the appointment on September 17, 1864. On October 12, 1864, he returned from recruiting service and reassumed command of the Second Brigade, First Division, Tenth Army Corps, and continued in command of that brigade until November 1, 1864, except from October 20 to 28, 1864, when he was temporarily in command of the Third Division, Tenth Army Corps. On November 1, 1864, General Hawley was placed in command of a provisional division, which was ordered to New York City during the Presidential election of November 8, 1864. The troops composing the division embarked at Fort Monroe November 3, 1864; arrived at New York November 6, 1864; reembarked November 14 and 15, 1864, and arrived at their former station near Deep Bottom, Virginia, November 17, 1864.

General Hawley's subsequent commands were as follows:

November 17 to December 2, 1864, Second Brigade, First Division, Tenth Army Corps; December 3, 1864, to January 1, 1865, Second Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps; January 1 to February 1, 1865, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps; February 17 to March 1, 1865, chief of staff United States forces at Fort Fisher, N. C.; March 1, 1865, to June 23, 1865, district of Wilmington, N. C.; July 5, 1865, to October 28, 1865, chief of staff department of Virginia.

In General Orders, No. 135, from the War Department, Adjutant-General's office, dated August 24, 1865, it was announced that, by direction of the President, Brig. Gen. Joseph R. Hawley was thereby honorably mustered out of the service of the United States, his services being no longer needed. In Special Orders, No. 468, from the War Department, Adjutant-General's office, dated August 30, 1865, it was announced that so much of General Orders, No. 135, from the War Department, Adjutant-General's office, dated August 24, 1865, as mustered Brigadier-General Hawley out of service was thereby revoked.

On October 28, 1865, he was relieved from duty as chief of staff Department of Virginia, and ordered to his home, thence to report by letter, and was mustered out and honorably discharged the service as brigadier-general of volunteers, to date from January 15, 1866, in General Orders, No. 168, War Department, Adjutant-General's office, dated December 28, 1865.

He was brevetted major-general, United States Volunteers, to date from September 28, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services during the war."

During his service General Hawley participated in battles and actions as follows:

As captain, First Connecticut Infantry (three months) Volunteers: Battle of Bull Run, Virginia, July 21, 1861.

As lieutenant-colonel and colonel, Seventh Connecticut Infantry Volunteers: Action at Fort Pulaski, Ga., April 10 and 11, 1862; battle at Secessionville, on James Island, South Carolina, June 16, 1862; action at St. Johns Bluff, Florida, October 2, 1862, and action at Coosawatchie, on the Pocotaligo River, South Carolina, October 22, 1863.

As colonel, Seventh Connecticut Infantry, in command of a brigade: Battle of Olustee, Fla., February 20, 1864, and in actions at Chester Station, Virginia, May 10, 1864; south side of the James, May 14, 1864; Palmers Creek, near Drewrys Bluff, Va., May 13 to 16, 1864; Bermuda Hundred, Va., May 27 and June 2, 1864; in front of Petersburg, Va., June 9, 1864, and Deep Bottom, or Deep Run, Virginia, August 14, 15, 16, and 18, 1864.

As brigadier-general of volunteers: Actions at Darbytown road, Virginia, October 13, 27, and 28, 1864.

General Hawley's conduct at the battle of Bull Run, Virginia, July 21, 1861 (when he was serving as captain, First Connecticut Infantry), was favorably commented upon by Col. E. D. Keyes, Eleventh Infantry, who commanded in that battle the First Brigade, First Division, of the Army of Northeastern Virginia. In his report, dated July 25, 1861, Colonel Keyes says:

"I observed the activity of Captains Hawley and * * * on the field."

General Hawley is also favorably mentioned in the report, dated March 25, 1864, of Brig. Gen. T. Seymour, commanding the Florida expeditionary forces, of the action at Olustee, Fla., February 20, 1864.

General Seymour says: "Colonels Hawley and ———, also commanding brigades, conducted their troops with great personal intelligence and valor."

Following are copies of and extracts from letters and indorsements found on file, in which the promotion of Colonel Hawley to the grade of brigadier-general and brevet major-general of volunteers is recommended:

He is a gentleman of high reputation and unexceptionable character, of untiring energy, whose whole soul is engaged in overwhelming the enemies of the Government.

With high consideration, I am, your obedient servant,

[Indorsement.]

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Norwich, April 20, 1864.

SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the merits of Col. J. R. Hawley, Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, for whose promotion application has been made.

He is a large hearted, thoroughly honest, and earnestly patriotic man. Abandoning an influential editorial position, he has from the commencement of the rebellion given himself to the service, being a captain in the three months' and a colonel in a three years' regiment now reenlisted. He has always shown himself a sagacious, brave, and efficient officer. Held in such high estimation at home that, unsolicited by himself, he received an honorable appointment of delegate at large to the Baltimore convention, and so esteemed in the field that he is trusted by his superiors and honored by his subordinates. I am confident you never will regret his promotion. If he can not be promoted at present, I would earnestly request, if it can be done, that he may be brevetted a brigadier-general.

I am, with high regard and esteem, your obedient servant,
WM. A. BUCKINGHAM,
Governor of Connecticut.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
New Haven, May 18, 1864.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States:

The undersigned, State officers, members of the general assembly, and other citizens of the State of Connecticut, beg leave to ask at the hands of Your Excellency the nomination of Joseph R. Hawley, of Hartford, in said State, now colonel of the Seventh Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, for the commission of a brigadier-general of volunteers.

Colonel Hawley has been in the volunteer service of his country from the beginning of the war, and is now acting brigadier in General Butler's army, Terry's division, Tenth Army Corps, Gillmore commanding.

Sumter fell on Saturday. On the Monday following his was among the first names in the first company that was that day raised and the first in the State tendered to the governor for the defense of the country.

First chosen first lieutenant and then captain, he led his company into the first fight of the war, and on that disastrous day his commanding and courageous "steady, boys" kept his line unbroken and brought them off with honor from the field.

Having served out his term he raised another company at once, without asking for promotion, but was thereupon made lieutenant-colonel of the Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, and on the promotion of Colonel Terry became its commanding officer.

The Seventh Connecticut has written its own eulogy on the history of this war, and its well-earned fame it gladly shares with its beloved commander.

Thus Colonel Hawley has been in the service from the start, and for most of the time as commander of a regiment or brigade. His tried coolness, bravery, ability, and good conduct in the camp and in the field have marked him as a soldier of no common merit and one eminently fit for the commission asked by his fellow-citizens to be conferred upon him.

His part in the bloody contests of Bull Run, Pulaski, James Island, Morris Island, Pocotaligo, and Olustee has made for him a most wonorable record.

Connecticut takes a just pride in her heroic sons, living and dead, and feels it to be a pleasant duty to promote the advancement of her young men, who are among the truest and bravest, and thus furnish them with a new stimulus for emulating the deeds of her distinguished names who have fallen in the defense of their country.

Signed by the governor, lieutenant-governor, and other State officials and 55 others, members of the State senate and house of representatives, including the speaker of the house.

WILLIAM FAXON, Esq., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I know that you need no prompting to do all in your power for Joe Hawley's advancement or advantage, and yet I have his promotion so much at heart that I can not forbear writing to you to urge that his friends in Washington should make strenuous effort to secure it. To an "outsider" it would seem that a member of the Cabinet must have the power to secure the promotion of an officer of such undeniable ability and brilliant services. I know that Mr. Welles is very friendly to Hawley. I know also his delicacy about asking for appointments for his friends, but can not he be induced in this instance to abandon his usual rule and ask earnestly that this long-delayed justice shall be done?

Would it be of use for me to write to Mr. Welles on the subject? Is there anything that we can do here that would be likely to forward the matter?

Please let me hear from you as soon as may suit your convenience.

In the meantime believe me to be, very sincerely, yours,

ALFRED H. TERRY.

WASHINGTON, June 15, 1864.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to forward to you the accompanying recommendations of Col. Joseph R. Hawley for the office of brigadier-general of volunteers. To these recommendations I wish to add my cordial indorsement and to say that, in my judgment, he has honestly earned and fairly deserves his promotion.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY C. DEMING.

---

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

SIR: Please forgive me for inclosing this slip for your perusal. Col. Joseph R. Hawley has served his country nobly, having been in the Army since the commencement of the war.

His name was the first down in Connecticut in answer to your first call. He served as captain during the three months' service. Immediately upon returning he recruited a company for the three years' service, and his was the first company to go into camp in that service in the State. He was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Seventh Connecticut, was long since made its colonel, and has now for many months had command of a brigade.

I have heard Governor Buckingham and many other Connecticut gentlemen lament his nonpromotion.

My husband, as you well know, don't like to interfere too much in Army appointments. He has spoken on this subject often to you and also to the Secretary of War. He feels very desirous to see so good a patriot and able military man as Colonel Hawley has proved himself receive the promotion he has nobly earned.

Please excuse my boldness and think of this—it will be a just act. I would not presume to address you on such a subject did I not so well know the feelings of wise men in the matter.

With great respect, always your friend,

Mrs. GIDEON WELLES.

June 27, 1864.

[Indorsement.]

Submitted to the Secretary of War and General Halleck.

A. LINCOLN.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION TENTH ARMY CORPS,
Bermuda Hundred, Va., July 12, 1864.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

DEAR SIR: May I venture to address you for the purpose of asking your active interference in behalf of the promotion of our friend Colonel Hawley? I know that you entertain a high opinion of, and sentiments of friendship for him, and perhaps I should assume that every effort in his behalf which your position permits you to make has already been made, but as I do not know this to be the case, and as it seems to me that the influence of a member of the Cabinet, energetically exercised in favor of one who has been so strongly recommended as he has been, of one who possesses such undoubted qualifications, of one who by his services has so fully earned the reward could scarcely fail to secure his promotion, I respectfully ask that such influence may be exercised. I am well aware that I need say nothing to you of Colonel Hawley's general ability, of his honorable character, or of his sincere, unselfish patriotism, but I have served with him for three years and I probably am better acquainted than anyone else with his military capacity and with the facts upon which his claims to promotion rest. I will therefore hastily sketch his military career.

Immediately after the fall of Sumter he raised a company for the First Connecticut Volunteers, and was elected its captain. In this capacity he participated in the summer campaign, receiving official notice of his conduct at the first battle of Bull Run. His regiment was mustered out of service in August, 1861, and he immediately raised a company for the Seventh Connecticut Regiment. Of this regiment he was appointed lieutenant-colonel, and he accompanied it to South Carolina as a part of General Sherman's expedition.

Soon after the capture of Port Royal his regiment was sent to Tybee Island and upon it devolved a very large part of the labor of the siege of Pulaski. During the bombardment of the fort Colonel Hawley was constantly in the trenches, and he rendered valuable service.

In May, 1862, a vacancy having occurred in the colonelcy of the regiment, Colonel Hawley was promoted to fill it. In the following June the regiment took part in General Benham's operations on James Island, and he led it with conspicuous gallantry in the unfortunate assault on Fort Lamar.

On the 22d of October of the same year he commanded his regiment at the battle of Pocotalgio and received very honorable mention of his good conduct in the reports of his commanding officers.

In January, 1863, he was assigned to the command of Fernandina, Fla. This post was a difficult one to govern as it was a mongrel population of contrabands, loyal and semiloyal refugees, and covert rebels, and it had fallen into a bad and disorderly state under the colonel's predecessor. After he took command matters speedily changed their aspect, and the post became one of the most quiet and orderly in the department. Such a high degree of administrative ability did he evince that when similar difficulties arose at St. Augustine he was transferred to that place for the purpose of effecting similar reforms. Equally good results followed in his new command.

In June, 1863, four companies of his regiment under the lieutenant-colonel formed part of General Gillmore's forces when he moved on Charleston. These companies led the attack on Morris Island July 10 and also the assault on Wagner July 11. Immediately after the commencement of the operation Colonel Hawley earnestly solicited General Gillmore to permit him to join him with the remainder of his regiment. In accordance with his request he was ordered to Morris Island, where he remained sometimes in command of his regiment and sometimes in command of a brigade until the close of the siege.

For his services there and elsewhere he was recommended by General Gillmore for promotion.

When the expedition to Florida was undertaken last winter he was placed in command of one of General Seymour's brigades. During the whole of that affair he commanded it with marked ability. His conduct at Olustee is spoken of as beyond praise. In the language of a brother officer, "If there was any glory in that fight it belonged to Hawley."

When the Tenth Corps was reorganized prior to coming to Virginia General Gillmore brigaded his troops with special reference to making him the senior officer in one of the brigades, and consequently its commander. With his brigade thus constituted he has taken part in all General Butler's operations in this vicinity, and he still commands it. At the battle of Drurys Bluff he displayed most distinguished courage and ability, repulsing with his troops four distinct and separate assaults of the enemy.

Of his capacity as a regimental commander, let the reputation of his regiment, universally acknowledged to be the best in the corps, speak. Of his capacity as a brigade commander, the fact that the organization of the corps was specially arranged so as to give him such a position while many colonels senior to him commanded regiments only is a sufficient proof.

Not content with merely fulfilling his routine duties, he has been an industrious student, and to-day is better read and better informed as a soldier than a large proportion of those of our officers who have been regularly bred to the profession of arms. With his whole heart in the cause and eminently conscientious in the discharge of his duty, he has been and is a most faithful and valuable servant of the Government.

It seems to me that such a man should not be left without the usual reward of such services and that the promotion which has been given to so many who were his inferiors, both in rank and service, should not be denied to him.

I have heard that the name of Colonel Stedman, of the Eleventh Connecticut, has been mentioned for promotion. I believe that Colonel Stedman is a good officer, but I am sure that neither his merit nor services will bear comparison with Colonel Hawley's, and I most sincerely hope that Hawley may be spared the mortification which he would feel were his junior to be promoted over him. I have written at great length and I fear that I have trespassed on both your time and patience, but I have thought that perhaps you were not aware how strong Colonel Hawley's claims are, and I could not do even this meager justice to the subject in fewer words.

Permit me to congratulate you on the splendid success of the Kearsarge, and to subscribe myself,

Very respectfully, your friend and obedient servant,

ALFRED H. TERRY.

WASHINGTON, July 16, 1864.

SIR: I beg leave to submit to you a letter from General Terry in behalf of Col. Joseph R. Hawley, to whose merits I have on former occasions called your attention.

All that is said in his favor by General Terry I would fully indorse. I have known him intimately for ten years and know of no one who has been more devoted to the cause in which we are all interested than Colonel Hawley. He volunteered at the very beginning and has continued in active service since. The governor and others earnestly desire his promotion; his friends have seen others of less merit and capability promoted, and they feel extremely solicitous, as you will perceive by General Terry's letter, that his worth and services should be recognized.

It is, I believe, the only instance where I have asked this distinction, and this I have preferred on separate occasions, with others, because I know the honor could not be more worthily bestowed.

Very respectfully,

GIDEON WELLES.

His Excellency A. LINCOLN.

[Indorsement.]

I believe Mr. Welles has never had a brigadier-general on his recommendation. I wish this appointment made so soon as it can be with consistency.

A. LINCOLN.

111 REMSEN STREET, Brooklyn, N. Y., July 23, 1864.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to call the attention of the Department to my recommendation now on file in your office of certain colonels of volunteers for the brevet of brigadier-general. The letter of recommendation is not now before me, but I desire particularly to call attention to the merits of

* * * * * * * *

Col. Joseph R. Hawley, Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, * * * all officers of great merit and of long and faithful service.

I am not aware that any of my recommendations for brevets have received favorable action.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Q. A. GILLMORE, Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION,
TENTH ARMY CORPS,
Before Petersburg, Va., August 16, 1864.

Lieut. Col. E. W. SMITH,
Acting Adjutant-General, Tenth Army Corps.

COLONEL: I have the honor to recommend that Col. Joseph R. Hawley, of the Seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, who now commands and since the organization of the corps has commanded the Second brigade of this division, be promoted to the rank of brigadier-general for his distinguished gallantry at the battle of Deep Run on the 16th instant.

During the whole of the present campaign Colonel Hawley has rendered most efficient service. At the battle of Drurys Bluff his brigade repulsed four distinct assaults from greatly superior numbers of the enemy, and at Deep Run, although suffering from illness which made every movement painful to him and which would have kept many men from the field, he led his brigade in the charge upon the enemy's works, and when they were carried advanced beyond them and successfully engaged the heavy masses which were soon concentrated upon us. On this occasion, as well as in every action in which he has been engaged, he has set a splendid example of courage and devotion to the service of his country; an example which is eminently deserving of recognition and reward.

I am, Colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ALFRED H. TERRY,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS TENTH ARMY CORPS,
Before Petersburg, Va., September 7, 1864.

Respectfully forwarded; earnestly recommended.
D. B. BIRNEY, Major-General.

[Second indorsement.]

The promotion of Colonel Hawley is most deserved, and it will be beneficial to the service that he should receive his brevet to a command which he has actually and gallantly exercised for many months.
BENJ. F. BUTLER,
Major-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA,

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

SIR: I respectfully but earnestly recommend that the following-named officers be promoted for faithful and efficient service during the war and for gallant conduct in the field, viz:

Brig. Gen. J. R. Hawley, United States Volunteers, to be major-general by brevet. * * *

Much of the service of these officers has been under my personal observation, and I make this recommendation in the belief that the promotion which I ask for them has been fully earned by meritorious conduct.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ALFRED H. TERRY,
Major-General, Commanding.

[First indorsement.]

Approved and respectfully forwarded to the Secretary of War.
U. S. GRANT,

[Second indorsement.]

Approved.
E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Norwich, September 22, 1865.

SIR: I would respectfully ask you to give Brig. Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, chief of the staff of Maj. Gen. A. H. Terry, now at Richmond, the brevet promotion of major-general.

General Hawley's name stands first on the roll of Connecticut volunteers. He raised the first company in the State that entered the service for the purpose of suppressing the rebellion and went as a lieutenant. He has voluntarily been in some of the severest battles and in some of the most responsible positions, where he has ever proved able to meet the highest expectations of his friends. In integrity and high character he is unimpeachable and is one of the most fearless, earnest, able and judicious advocates of the rights of man in New England. His brevet promotion would, I feel confident, be right.

With high regard, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM A. BUCKINGHAM,
Governor of Connecticut.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Official statement furnished to Mr. R. W. Thompson, clerk, Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, January 31, 1905.

By authority of the Secretary of War:

JOSEPH ROSWELL HAWLEY.

Joseph Roswell Hawley, of Hartford, Conn., was born at Stewartsville, Richmond County, N. C., October 31, 1826; graduated from Hamilton College, New York, in 1847; admitted to the bar in 1850 at Hartford, Conn.; practiced law six and a half years; became editor of the Hartford Evening Press in February, 1857, which, in 1867, was consolidated with the Hartford Courant, of which he became editor; enlisted in the Union Army as a captain April 18, 1861; became brigadier and brevet major general; mustered out January 15, 1866; elected governor of Connecticut in April, 1866; delegate to the free-soil national convention of 1852; Presidential elector in 1868; president of the Republican national conventions of 1872, 1876, and 1880; president of the United States Centennial Commission from its organization in March, 1873, to the completion of the work of the Centennial Exposition; trustee of Hamilton College; received the degree of doctor of laws from Hamilton College, Yale University, and Trinity College; elected in November, 1872, a Representative to the Forty-second Congress to fill a vacancy caused by the death of J. L. Strong; reelected to the Forty-third and Forty-sixth Congresses; elected to the United States Senate as a Republican to succeed William W. Eaton, Democrat; took his seat March 4, 1881; reelected in 1887, 1893, and 1899. His last term expired March 3, 1905. Brigadier-general, United States Army, retired, by authority of special act of Congress. Died March 18, 1905, at Washington, D. C.

Mr. BULKELEY. Without detaining the Senate any longer, I merely wish to say that to this good woman, who for fifteen years or more of the latter part of General Hawley's life was his devoted and faithful wife and in his declining years ministered to his every want, we owe, for his sake, I believe, not as a compliment, but as an expression of gratitude to him and for her services to him, the small pittance which we are asking for in this bill.

Mr. President, in my opinion the passage of this bill will furnish no precedent other than to follow the precedents that have long been established by this body and by Congress. I hold in my hand a list furnished me by the Pension Bureau of about 200 widows of gallant soldiers, who, by special acts of Congress, are receiving to-day pensions from $200 and more down to $50 per month. This bill will add another name to this royal list of women who are deserving as well of the Congress and the country as their distinguished husbands who served so gallantly during the war.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator will put that list in the RECORD.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask that the list may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The list referred to is as follows:

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not intend to consume more than a moment or two of the time of the Senate, but I desire to thank the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], who was kind enough to consent that the unfinished business might be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of this bill. We realize that but for his courtesy the bill could not have been brought to a vote at this session of Congress.

I desire particularly to express to the leader of the minority [Mr. BLACKBURN] the appreciation which the people of Connecticut, irrespective of party, and the comrades of General Hawley, will feel for the very considerate and feeling remarks which he has made upon this occasion.

Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill with great pleasure, and I feel that in so doing I shall not be doing an injustice to anybody nor creating any sort of discrimination against anybody. I shall not vote for this bill, as was suggested in the remarks of one Senator, as in any way according a pension because the soldier was a Senator of the United States. I shall vote for the bill because it bestows a small pension, which is needed, in my judgment, upon the widow of one of the most distinguished generals that this country ever knew, and because it is a feeble attempt on the part of Congress in a certain measure to express the honor and esteem in which it holds that general, and because it does it upon the ground, not that he was a Senator of the United States, but that he for five years served his country faithfully in every military rank from that of private to major-general. I think upon that ground it is justified, irrespective of any mere technical rule which may govern the attitude of the committee in the consideration of such cases.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to make a correction. I filed with the Committee on Pensions a letter from Mrs. Hawley giving a statement as to her property. My recollection was that it was $40,000. The chairman of the committee suggested that it was $50,000, which I mildly disputed. I find upon reference to the letter that the chairman of the committee was right and that I had forgotten the exact amount. It was $50,000.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not know that the yeas and nays are to be called on the passage of the pending bill, and for that reason only I rise to say that I shall vote for it. Twelve years ago when I first came to this body there were a great many Federal soldiers on the other side of the Chamber, and almost all the Senators on this side of the Chamber who represented Southern States had been Confederate soldiers. It is a vanishing band on each side. There are comparatively few left on either side. I think all of the Confederate soldiers on this side of the Chamber who are now present, except myself, have indicated their intention to support this bill. I beg pardon of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], who says to me that he has not spoken, but that he intends to support the bill. Sitting behind my seat, I did not see that he is present. I am glad of the opportunity to say it for him, if he does not say it for himself. That being the case, I was unwilling that the opportunity should pass to put myself on record, which might not be given in the absence of the call of the yeas and nays. I served in this Chamber for ten years with General Hawley, and I am very glad to give my voice in harmony with that which has already been said as to the character of the man and as to his services here and in the field.

Ordinarily, Mr. President, Senators from my section have little to say on the subject of pensions. We think it not in good taste for us to take any part in opposition to pensions, and we usually leave the matter of pensions to the Senators of either party who represent States in the northern part of the United States. But there are exceptions, and I think this is one of them, and I am glad to have this opportunity.

I am particularly glad to say this in view of the fact that there have been recently in more than one instance evidences of the desire of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to show their consideration for those of us on this side of the Chamber, not only in the granting of such pensions as was stated by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], as in the case of the widow of Stonewall Jackson, but in the removal from the statutes of the country of words which were unpleasant, not to say offensive, to those of us who happened to be on the other side of that great conflict.

I repeat I should have said nothing if I had known that there was going to be a call of the yeas and nays, and not knowing that I felt impelled to have a record made of the position which I occupy in the matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, were I voting my sentiments in this case, the bill would have been reported long ago and it would have been reported favorably. It would have been reported for the entire amount. Were I voting my sentiments on all of the bills which come before the Committee on Pensions, it is equally true that nearly every one of them would be at a much higher rate than that at which they are reported to this body. But I could not, at the grave of a friend, so allow my sentiments to govern me as to do injustice to the living. I could not, with all my love of General Hawley and my admiration for his record, vote for that which I thought would be an injustice to thousands upon thousands of widows of good and noble officers and brave soldiers who fought in the great civil war.

I was loath to bring in this bill with an adverse report. That it did not appear upon the Calendar before this time is due to the request of Senators, who still hoped that I might possibly bring in a favorable report, and it has been delayed undoubtedly because of that desire and hope upon their part, and when they saw that the report would not be favorable, they then asked that it be brought in even with an unfavorable report, that it might be voted upon.

Mr. President, I believe in paying as high a tribute as any one possibly could pay to the memory of General Hawley. I am willing that we shall erect a statue to his memory, as has been suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. It may be a shaft to the very skies and that on every foot of it may be written his noble record. But I do not wish to see it capped with an injustice toward any other American citizen, and that is why I have opposed the granting of a pension in this case, as the expression of our gratitude in the measure of dollars instead of in words of praise and sentiment, when I know that a pension would be taken as, and will be, a precedent for all others.

Mr. President, Senators have spoken of the devotion of this woman to her husband. Ah, when Senators speak continually of the devotion of the wives of officers to their husbands they seem to forget that devotion is a natural element in woman's heart, and that it is just as strong, just as ardent, just as true, just as noble on the part of thousands upon thousands of widows of privates and widows of minor officers. It is not a peculiarity on the part of the wife of this general. It is something which always exists, and, thank God, always will exist. It is not something that should be paid for or that should be considered a purchasable quantity. It is that which we honor, which we adore in womankind; and as I say, it is as wide as the great wide world. This devotion is the same in her case as it is in the case of the thousands upon thousands of other widows.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] said that all rules have their exceptions. Aye, Mr. President, they have. But the exception should always be exercised toward mercy and humanity. If we should make an exception, that exception should always be toward the poor and the lowly and those in necessitous conditions. I think Senators will agree with me that I have yielded and bended those rules again and again to reach necessitous cases. I think I have tried to apply them in such manner that none for whose benefit they were framed shall go away and feel that they are in necessitous condition or must suffer in any manner whatever without receiving aid.

The Senator from Wisconsin says there is a difference between the widow of the officer and the widow of the private, intimating, as I understand, that the question of necessity as applied to one should not be the same as the necessity as applied to another; that destitution in one case means one thing, and that destitution in another case means another thing. I deny it. Let me give the Senate an example of two boys, brothers, we will say, born before 1850. One of them through a Representative or a Senator got a position in our great institution of learning, either in the Navy or in the Army. One is made a general. The other boy remains at home. Both go into the Army. One serves as a colonel and finally becomes a general. The other serves as a private. One gives his life to his country. The other gives his life to his country. Both have left widows to mourn their loss. One widow has lived a life of comparative ease as the wife of an officer. The other widow has lived a life of hardship as the wife of a private soldier. Then, if we are to give either of these two persons one touch of generosity from the hands of the Government, I can but feel that we should give the poor woman who has struggled and suffered equal consideration with the one who has not. I can but believe if we are to give one of them a touch of heaven before they enter into their last state, it should be in favor of the one who has suffered more and who has given more in giving the life of the one who was her support. I deny that we should make any distinction whatever.

I admit, however, that this sentiment is strong. I understand, as everyone on the Pensions Committee understands, that where there is pressure from one man to raise the pension of the widow of a private soldier there are a thousand importunities to come to the aid of the widow of an officer. I have tried to bring one up as near to the standard as the other, and I certainly am thankful to every Senator here who has borne kindly with me where I have explained to him the impossibility of raising this one or that one beyond a given amount without doing an injustice to all the others.

It is proposed now to pension this widow at $50 a month, a woman worth $50,000, able to travel abroad, to educate her children; and here come those who are worth nothing and who are drawing $30 a month, and they appeal to me. What am I to say? What answer can I give? Their husbands made a noble record also; possibly not as high as that of this officer, but they gave all they had. They did their duty honestly and fairly and justly. They performed every duty that a soldier was compelled to perform. What answer can I give to the hundreds that come before the committee and say, "We have nothing. You have granted to the widow of one, with an acknowledged property standing of $50,000, $50 a month." What will you do for the one who has nothing and who is receiving but $30 per month? Ah, Senators here can answer that, but those who are upon the committee can not answer it, because there is no answer. The only answer that can possibly be given is that the Senate, in its love for a fellow-member, in memory of the great soldier, with that sentiment and affection which they felt for him, gave this as a tribute to his memory, and not because of the necessitous condition of the widow. That does not answer, though, when the people are demanding exact justice.

Mr. President, it is said that this is an exceptional case. Every report and affidavit and letter that comes before the committee will recite a case as an exceptional case, and they will go into the record of the officer. Indeed, they are all exceptional cases. If they were not exceptional cases, they could not receive any consideration whatever by the Committee on Pensions. There has been printed or offered to be printed in the RECORD a list of many who have been granted $50 a month. But if I understand it correctly there are very few, if any, who have been granted that rate except they showed to some extent or to some degree destitution. That, I understand, has been the basis, practically, of every one of them.

We proposed here the other day to grant a pension of $50 a month to a man who had once been a member of this body—General Blair, from New Hampshire. It was raised upon the floor to $72 a month on motion of the Senator from New Hampshire. I made no objection whatever. But here was a poor old man who had given his whole life, and a life of labor, to the public service, and although wounded many times, although a noble general, with a fine record, he never once would draw a pension or ask for it, and he never even asked that a bill be introduced in his behalf. It was introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire, and without one word from the ex-Senator the pension was granted. But he was not a person holding $50,000 worth of property. If he had been worth half of that sum, I do not believe he would have accepted the pension, because so long as he could stand and perform duty and earn a livelihood, he would not come to the Government for any help whatever.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. BULKELEY. It is only for a moment. I desire to say in connection with the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota that from an examination of the records I find that almost the last case that was reported from the Pensions Committee was where the widow for whose benefit the bill was pending testified that she had a hundred thousand dollars, and the bill was recommended by the committee, and passed. I do not think the Senator from North Dakota was chairman of the committee at the time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know what the Senator from Connecticut refers to. It certainly did not occur since I have been on the committee.

Mr. BULKELEY. I refer to the widow of General Lawton, who was killed in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated that some pensions have been granted although destitution was not established. I was not chairman of the committee at the time referred to by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I agreed to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside at 1 o'clock for thirty minutes or thereabouts. It has been over one hour. I serve notice now that unless this debate is to cease very soon I shall ask for the regular order.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. BULKELEY. I trust the Senator from North Dakota will let this bill come to a vote. I hope there will be no further debate after the chairman of the committee has finished.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I was ready to vote on the bill an hour ago.

Mr. BULKELEY. I know it. So was I.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have a few minutes.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to present a conference report and to ask for its present consideration.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will withhold action upon the report until we dispose of this matter. It can not take more than a very few minutes.

Mr. PENROSE. The conference report can be presented to the Senate, and I will withhold action; but this discussion seems to be endless, and it is very important to have the appropriation bill get over to the House and be acted upon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I myself should like to have two minutes, or one minute perhaps, to say a few words in memory of General Hawley.

Mr. PENROSE. I will withhold the report until the Senator concludes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this bill will pass the Senate. I shall not ask for a division or for the yeas and nays upon it. I feel that I can say that it will pass the Senate as the sentiment of this body and because of its love for General Hawley, for the purpose of showing its appreciation of his long services in the Army and in this body; and while the rules of the committee have been overruled by the Senate, I can not myself vote for this bill for the reason I have given. I feel that if I did so I would do a thousand injustices.

Mr. ALDRICH obtained the floor.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not propose to take more than a minute, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MALLORY. I shall not take more than two minutes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FRYE (to Mr. HANSBROUGH). Give them three minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will not take more than one minute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota demands the regular order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will give the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Florida five minutes between them, and they can divide it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. I believe I have a right to the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought the Chair recognized me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair first recognized the Senator from Rhode Island and asked the Senator from Rhode Island if he would yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. I desired merely to state that I understand the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]——

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. I understand that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] a few minutes ago stated that every ex-Confederate in this body would vote for this bill.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Florida is mistaken.

Mr. MALLORY. I was not present at the time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I simply said that those ex-Confederates who were present had already spoken in favor of the bill, as I supposed; but I found out afterwards that I was mistaken. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] called my attention to the fact. I thought he was out of the Chamber. I expressly excluded those who were not in the Chamber.

Mr. TALIAFERRO rose.

Mr. BACON. I want to say, furthermore, that I did not know that my young friend, the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], was a Confederate soldier. He looks so young that I had not included him in the class.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to say that I have not the slightest objection to giving all the pensions that are proper to every Union veteran. I have never voted against a single pension bill since I have been in the Senate. I have listened to the arguments in this case, and I am satisfied that the position taken by the chairman of the committee is correct.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the junior Senator from Florida?

Mr. ALDRICH. Under restrictions which have been placed upon me I have only a minute.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I can take the floor in my own right later, if the Senator from Rhode Island declines to yield.

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield to the Senator if he desires to go ahead now.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I simply desire to make a statement.

As a member of the Committee on Pensions, I think it perhaps proper that I should have a word to say. I united in the report of the committee against the passage of this bill. I did so not out of hostility to General Hawley or to any veteran of the Federal Army. I considered the bill before the committee just as I have considered every other bill which has been brought there. When it was taken up we applied the rules of the committee to the consideration of the bill. It was shown that the widow of General Hawley had a considerable income, an income perhaps sufficient to comfortably support her and her family, and the committee held, and I held with the committee, that it was not proper that the Congress should vote her a pension of $50 a month.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Pensions or the members of that committee can be justly criticised for their attitude upon this bill. The duties of the members of that committee are certainly very onerous. They are obliged by circumstances to adopt rigorous rules and to enforce them, as they have done in this case. But these rules should not necessarily be applied to the action of the Senate.

This body during my service has passed pension bills for the benefit of the widows and families of great soldiers, about which there was no dissent here and no dissent in the country. In these bills the character and the service of the soldier have been recognized as the basis of Congressional action.

What has been done in the United States in this direction, in granting pensions to the widows and families of General Grant and General Sheridan and General Logan and a large number of other great soldiers, as a recognition of the soldiers' services, has been in the line of the policy adopted in every civilized country since history commenced. Great soldiers have been rewarded by grants of money, their memory perpetuated by the erection of monuments, their families made the recipients of numerous evidences of the appreciation of a grateful people.

It was my fortune to have known General Hawley many years before he entered the Senate, as a Member of the House of Representatives, as commissioner in charge of the Philadelphia Exposition, as governor of the State of Connecticut. The Senator and I entered the Senate in the same year, and I have had opportunities during all that time to know as well as any man could the character of his services. I am sure that no people ever had a more patriotic and devoted servant, in every capacity, than the American people had in Joseph R. Hawley, and in the passage of the bill which is now under consideration I am sure that the Senate of the United States will in a very small degree show the appreciation in which the American people hold his services.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPRINT OF PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that an order may be made for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 24640) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions, being the amendment in the nature of a substitute, showing the amendments to the amendment by number.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the expiration of my term in the Senate, Mr. President, a vacancy will occur upon the Committee on Military Affairs. As the inquiry with which that committee is charged will be carried on during the vacation of Congress, I ask to be excused from further service upon the committee, in order that a vacancy may be avoided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator is excused.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now I would ask that the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] may be assigned to fill the vacancy on that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] be appointed to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNA JOHNSON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 8580) granting land to Anna Johnson, which was, in line 7, to strike out "three" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is merely in the description of the land.

The motion was agreed to.

DENATURED ALCOHOL.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24816) to amend an act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Two amendments were reported by the Committee on Finance. The first amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 4, after the word "alcohol," at the end of the first section, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That rum of not less than 150° proof may be withdrawn, for denaturation only, in accordance with the provisions of said act of June 7, 1906, and in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There seems to be no objection to this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. The next amendment is the one which was contested.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, on page 4, line 4, after the word "distilleries," insert "except the provisions of section 3284 of the Revised Statutes;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That at distilleries producing alcohol from any substance whatever, for denaturation only, and having a daily spirit-producing capacity of not exceeding 100 proof gallons, the use of cisterns or tanks of such size and construction as may be deemed expedient may be permitted in lieu of distillery bonded warehouses, and the production, storage, the manner and process of denaturing on the distillery premises the alcohol produced, and transportation of such alcohol, and the operation of such distilleries shall be upon the execution of such bonds and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, and such distilleries may by such regulations be exempted from such provisions of the existing laws relating to distilleries, except the provisions of section 3284 of the Revised Statutes, as may be deemed expedient by said officials.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is the amendment which many Senators here, including myself, claim nullifies the whole bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire at the proper time, if it be not in order now, to offer an amendment to come in after the word "may," in line 8, on page 1 of the bill. I move at that point to insert the words "after January 1, 1908." I suppose the committee amendment ought to be disposed of before my amendment is considered.

Mr. FRYE. Let us have a vote on the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I should like to understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "may," insert "after January 1, 1908;" so as to read:

That notwithstanding anything contained in the act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906, domestic alcohol when suitably denatured may, after January 1, 1908, be withdrawn from bond without the payment of internal-revenue tax, etc.

Mr. CARTER. What is the insertion?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. What are the words proposed to be inserted?

Mr. DANIEL. I will explain it in a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read Mr. DANIEL's amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. What has become of the committee amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The second committee amendment has not been agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks concerning the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia desire action upon the second committee amendment to be deferred?

Mr. DANIEL. I do not desire action upon it until after I have had something to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the present measure has been already amended at the instance of many manufacturers both of rum and of tobacco in this country so as to include rum as one of the spirits that may be withdrawn from bonded warehouses for denaturization. There can be no objection to that that I can see. The first section of the bill is one that has attracted considerable objection. It provides that notwithstanding the act for the withdrawal from bond, tax free, of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials, alcohol after being suitably denatured under that act may be withdrawn from bond without the payment of internal-revenue tax "and used in the manufacture of ether and chloroform and other definite chemical substances where said alcohol is changed into some other chemical substance and does not appear in the finished product as alcohol."

The effect of this act will be disastrous to the present manufacturers of ether, and my object in speaking to this amendment is to call attention to the effect it will have and to the improvidence of rapid and fundamental changes in the laws that regulate this subject.

There is in the city of Richmond a firm engaged in the manufacture of ether. Through their expertness in its manufacture they have considerably reduced its price. Under the laws as they existed before the act of June 7 of last year they were conducting a prosperous and successful business. At the time that act was passed they were represented before the committee, and were heard, and went away satisfied that their manufacture would not be interfered with. Under these circumstances they put more capital into their plant, and they find now, about eight months after apparently deliberate action had been taken on this subject, that they are menaced by a change of law which will prove ruinous to their business.

The establishment to which I refer is the American Ether Company, of Richmond, Va. It is engaged in the manufacture of sulphuric ether without the use of alcohol. It was at their instance in large measure, though they were joined by others somewhat in the same situation, that denatured alcohol was not allowed to be used for making ether. They state in a communication which I have before me that under this assurance the company has spent large sums of money in perfecting its plant and has accumulated large stocks of ether. It is now proposed to amend the law so as to permit the manufacture of ether from free alcohol. They say in objection to this proposition, first, that the amount of ether made in this country is so very small that the benefit to the people at large would not be commensurate. They show that the total amount of ether made in the United States in 1905 was 871,394 pounds, valued at $440,240, as stated in Bulletin 57 of the Bureau of the Census, page 40. Of this amount the American Ether Company, of Richmond, to which I refer, produced 365,000 pounds, leaving 506,394 pounds made from tax-paid alcohol, and this manufacture yielded the Government about $250,000 of revenue.

They argue as a conclusion from these premises that to save users in this country about $300,000 the Government would lose $250,000 in revenue and their own investment of $200,000 would be entirely destroyed. They further present the argument—

> Third. That Congress having settled this matter at the last session of Congress, assuring us that our business would not be injured, it does not seem fair now to amend the law just as it is going into effect, in such a manner as not only to destroy our investment in our plant, but to render valueless the large expenditures made by us in perfecting our plant since last summer and to cause us a very heavy loss on our stock of ether, which we have since then accumulated.

In response to the suggestion that with the use of free alcohol for ether the market and manufacture of ether would be alike increased, they say that the only other outlet for cheaper ether would be for smokeless powder, and that according to their best information ether can not be made cheap enough from free alcohol to compete with the present solvents used by powder makers.

They state that they have letters from some of the largest manufacturers, who say that to enable them to use it the price could not be over 10 cents per pound, whereas to make ether from denatured alcohol would cost the manufacturer to make, for material alone, 10 cents per pound, to which must be added his profit, interest, wear and tear on his plant, packages, transportation, and other incidental charges.

Mr. President, I am well aware that if it be demonstrated that a change of taxation is largely beneficial to the great mass of the people, one who urges that a particular factory or factories may be damaged puts himself in a position which is not usually respected in Congress and which can not be rightfully or successfully measured against a general public consideration. But, at least, Mr. President, when such menaces appear to an established order of things, when the subject has been canvassed in Congress and has been dealt with with knowledge of the conditions which exist and of the injury which a change would superinduce, it is not the part of a wise legislator to act hastily or indiscreetly so as to impair properties and disorder manufactures which have been engaged and which are progressing under an established and recently ordained order of things. It is wise that innovations should take place slowly, that society may adjust itself to them as far as practicable by reasonable anticipation.

If it should come to pass that Congress now, so soon upon the heels of its former treatment of this subject, should fundamentally reverse its policy and should reenact statutes which destroy and break down those institutions and establishments which have been erected upon the acceptance of the policy, it should at least "temper the wind to the shorn lamb" and give all opportunity that fittingly may be given for such readjustment as may be indispensable.

It is with a view to the possibility of the passage of this bill that I have, therefore, proposed the amendment, which will in due time be considered, postponing the operation of this revolutionary and destructive controversy to at least the 1st day of January, 1908.

I have before me, Mr. President, quite a number of papers and the testimony of the hearings which have been had upon this subject. On page 16 of the hearings before the Finance Committee, Mr. John B. Purcell, of Richmond, appeared as a representative of the American Ether Company, in which he is himself engaged as a representative of a house long established and of high standing in the city of Richmond. At this hearing he testified as follows:

> After the passage of the free-alcohol bill by the House last summer, we proposed to add an amendment in the Senate explicitly forbidding the use of denatured alcohol for the manufacture of ether, as the wording of the bill was not, in our opinion, sufficiently definite on that point, and at the suggestion of Hon. JOHN LAMB, Representative from our district, we sought and obtained through him an interview with Mr. HILL, the patron of the present bill, Mr. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, and Mr. CHAMP CLARK, all members of the Ways and Means Committee, and apprised them of the amendment we desired. They all and severally assured us that our amendment was unnecessary, as it was the unanimous opinion of their committee that ether could not be made from alcohol, and that the Commissioner of Revenue concurred in the view. With this assurance our amendment was not offered. When the bill was reported to the Senate, Senator MARTIN asked the chairman, Senator ALDRICH, if the bill would permit of ether being made from denatured alcohol, and the Senator replied "that it would not be permitted." Senator MARTIN asked the chairman if he knew what would be the view of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on that point, and Senator ALDRICH stated that he did know, and that the Commissioner took the same view.

This is attested by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the time of the passage of the bill, Mr. President, and these are the assurances, or at least some of the assurances, which were received by the representatives of the American Ether Company when they appeared here to be heard in June last. I will further state that I am myself personally privy and have knowledge of the reiteration of these assurances by some persons prominently connected with the Government, whose duty it was to deal with such things.

I need not prolong this feature of the case, but it should be understood that there is a large capital now engaged in this business; that there are many hands employed, and that capital has been invested since the passage of this bill, eight months ago, in the progressive manufacture of this article. I do not know, at least of my own knowledge, how justly to weight the scientific objections which are sometimes made to such matters as this, but there appear also in this testimony, Mr. President, considerations with respect to the reconversion of ether into alcohol, and thence into the various forms which spirits assume under chemical treatment and manufacture, that there is a considerable danger that if the denatured alcohol may be manufactured into ether, it may be readily reconverted into alcohol, and in that form go into the marts of trade.

In this view, Mr. Purcell, of Richmond, a gentleman whom I well know as one of great intelligence, and than whom no citizen possesses higher character, argued before the committee, and set before it substantial statements, to show how ether might be reconverted into alcohol, and great danger, not only to the revenues, but to the trade of the country, might therefrom arise.

On page 11 of these hearings those who may care to pursue the subject will see the processes set forth from the chemical formulas that control them, and will perceive that that is a suggestion of substance and one that ought to be fully and carefully weighed.

This subject, Mr. President, which thus involves one branch of our manufactures, is much further reaching. It involves the whole manufacture of whisky in the United States. It was stated by a very intelligent and well-informed witness before the Committee on Finance that the whisky trust was, in his opinion, the power behind the throne in the propaganda of this measure. I know nothing on that subject, nor do I presume that any other Senator knows anything; but we do know that other interests than the farmers, who were made so conspicuous in the agitation of a year ago, are probably the chief promoters of this bill. I do not charge, neither do I mean to intimate, that these interests, who are the manufacturers of the United States, are in any respect deviating from a just principle in being the promoters of this bill. If it is going to add to the benefit of the manufacturers in the United States they have a perfect right, unchallenged by anyone in its exercise, to promote the consideration and passage of this measure; but first of all they should move with regard to the rights and interests of others, and when they set to work to get the farmers of the United States to come forward as its most conspicuous advocates, that becomes a matter of diplomacy which should be noted. There is no doubt of the fact that the apparent appearance of the farmer upon the scene, so picturesquely, so multifariously, so constantly, is a matter superinduced and brought about largely by the instigation of the manufacturers who desire his influence in the Congress of the United States and who gild the pictures which they draw with very pleasing colors as to what the farmer will derive as a benefit of this measure.

We all remember how something like a year ago bucolic pictures were painted before our visions, which made it appear that Aladdin would soon wave his lamp over the old fields of the country and gratify the wishes of those who toil therein. So far as heard from, I have not been impressed with the fact that the farmers of this country have made any great progress in the last eight months in realizing the dreams which were dreamed for them in large measure by their friends, the manufacturers.

It is quite clear—and such is the evidence before the committee—that the manufacturers had an organized machine, by which they instigated the people of this country here and there to urge Congress to pass this measure. I do not deny their right to do it; but, in weighing things here, we should understand what we are doing and duly weigh the various considerations and influences on one side or another.

In the course of the hearings before the Finance Committee there was introduced by one of the witnesses, who is a large manufacturer of whisky in Peoria, Ill., one of the circulars that have gone far and wide and been spread broadcast on this subject. I will read it, so that it may appear in the RECORD as it stands on page 38 of these hearings. I wish to note the fact that the letter head bears this legend:

[Committee of manufacturers formed to assist in securing cheaper alcohol for industrial purposes, 21 William street, New York City.]

It reads as follows:

NEW YORK, February 4, 1907.

GENTLEMEN: We inclose copy of bill and report by the Committee on Ways and Means which provides for amendments to the laws governing the production of alcohol, so as to give greater facilities for the production, denaturing, and transportation of untaxed denatured alcohol. This bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, and it is expected that it will be passed by the House within a few days.

The purpose of this bill is to still further reduce the cost of denatured alcohol, by enabling farmers or other persons who wish to produce it on a small scale to distill it in suitable locked stills, and to have it denatured without the expense of a denaturing bonded warehouse. The provisions allowing the transportation of denatured alcohol in tank cars will also materially reduce its cost to the consumer.

It is highly important that this bill should become law at the present session of Congress, and we would ask you to sign the inclosed petitions and send one of them to each of the Senators from your State, with a letter urging them to use their influence to secure prompt action by the Finance Committee of the Senate as soon as the bill reaches that body.

Should you desire additional copies of the bill or petition, we shall be pleased to send them to you.

Yours, very truly, J. H. ALLEN,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. President, the blank forms of the petition to be signed, which were inclosed with these letters or circulars, sent far and wide, will be found on page 39, and is as follows:

To the honorable Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned respectfully urge the enactment of legislation amending the laws governing the distillation of alcohol so as to permit farmers or other persons wishing to produce alcohol on a small scale to distill it in suitable locked stills and to have it denatured without the expense of a denaturing bonded warehouse, and authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prescribe regulations permitting the transportation of denatured alcohol in tank cars.

The purpose of the desired legislation is to reduce the cost of denatured alcohol by giving greater facilities for its production and distillation. Under the present laws relating to this subject alcohol intended to be denatured and sold without payment of internal-revenue tax must be produced under the same conditions as distilled beverage spirits. Those conditions tend to limit the production of alcohol to large distilleries, while the expense of the required distillery warehouse and bonded denaturing warehouse adds materially to its cost. The statutory limitation on the size of the packages containing alcohol prevents its shipment in tank cars, a method of transportation which would reduce its cost to the consumer.

The proposed amendments would not result in the loss of any revenue to the Government and would greatly benefit the farmers of the country, both by furnishing them with a material for lighting, heating, and motor fuel purposes and by creating additional markets for the farm products from which alcohol is distilled.

Yours, respectfully, ——— ———.

Under the influence, Mr. President, of this propaganda, of editorials and of advertisements of one sort and another that went forth to the agricultural communities of the United Sates, the farmers began to see themselves growing rich quickly from the distillation of alcohol out of the waste products of their farms. A short and smooth road from agriculture to great riches had been discovered, and the farmers of the country were, naturally enough, eager to go at once traveling thereupon; but I have not heard, Mr. President, that in the eight months of the use of this royal road to wealth that the lean earth had been very deeply larded therein, or that real estate in farming communities had been thereby greatly improved in value, and I am very much afraid, Mr. President, that the percentage of realization in this case will not be larger than in the case of many other booms.

Let me not be misunderstood. The manufacturers of this country, and the agriculturists of this country as well, had a perfect right to set forth these things to the people, and if they believed what they set forth they are beyond criticism. It is now said, however, by a distinguished Senator here who represents one of the great agricultural regions of the United States, namely, North Dakota, that this scheme of sudden riches to farmers is a gold brick. It is thought by some that this gold brick can, by the chemistry of an additional law, be turned into pure gold, but when we take up the processes by which the conversion of last year's gold brick into the pure gold has to be consummated we encounter new difficulties. In the first place, there appears upon the scene a large body of distillers of spirits from corn and otherwise. The great distillers of Peoria come here and in a most intelligent manner, as men who have knowledge of their business, set forth menaces which are introduced to the business of the country by the bill which came to us from the House.

The scheme of the House bill is further to encourage and facilitate the denaturing of alcohol, and professedly to stimulate the production of alcohol all through the agricultural regions of the United States on small farms, and through the use of the waste products of the farm for those purposes; and as the bill stands, while its proposition and outlook is to enable the farmer to start an alcoholic distillery, no internal-revenue officer is required to appear to be a sentinel upon the scene. The whisky manufacturers argue, first that they are——

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the Senator does not understand that under the bill as it came from the House the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may not employ storekeepers if he thinks it necessary, does he?

Mr. DANIEL. I do not say so; no, sir. I do not understand that. I am coming to explain that pretty soon. He is not required to keep a storekeeper at each distillery.

Mr. FULTON. He may if he desires.

Mr. DANIEL. He may——

Mr. FULTON. If he thinks proper.

Mr. DANIEL. He may. But, Mr. President, if these distilleries are to spring up all over the country, if a storekeeper has to be kept at each one of them, if the farmer is going actively into the business, it is going to take an army of storekeepers to carry out the purposes which the Senator intimates will be carried out by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The question would arise, Will the storekeepers cost more to the Government than the alcohol pays?

At this stage of the second experimentation on the subject the farmer, instead of finding himself as a free citizen handling the products of his farm at such times as he pleases and in such ways as he pleases and in accordance with his own idiosyncrasies and purposes, is to have an internal-revenue officer there watching him, superintending him, and permitting him to do nothing unless he is there to watch him and superintend him. On yesterday, Mr. President, it was confessed and here stated that the first denatured-alcohol act, of June 7, 1906, was a mere experiment; when we began to realize some of the difficulties which we are up against in considering the pending bill, it was again said, "Oh, this is a mere experiment." And when objection was made that this scheme was imperfect, and that that plan needed further amendment and correction, it was, in the third degree, suggested that next year we could go along and make another experiment. Experimentation upon the body politic, made by those who do not know with any precision what they are doing, is one of the most fatal things on earth.

That leads me, sir, to the reflection and observation that no one mind that has full information on this subject, and that has thrashed it out in its ramifications, has ever yet set forth to Congress or to the Senate any harmonious and well-digested scheme. On the contrary, Mr. President, while this is true, it is also true that Congress has been prodded, urged, and stimulated to go on now, quickly, instantly, and give the farmers a chance to get rich. This subject, Mr. President, deserves and should receive the wisest and best consideration that a learned mind and careful judgment can give to it, and the very closing days of this session, when there are not enough hours in the day for any Senator to discharge in a fitting manner one-half of the duties which he is called upon to perform, is not the time which should be selected for the consideration of a subject which can only get a glance from a mind which should pore over it with reflection, and only catch the momentary attention of an ear which should be alert to draw from all sources the elements of information and wisdom which should be applied to it.

We are told that people are getting rich in Germany through the manufacture of denatured alcohol. We know very little of what is going on in Germany, but from what was related to the Committee on Finance by a gentleman who once lived in Germany and who has studied the German system I am impressed with the opinion that if Americans are expecting any rapid, immediate, or sure path to agricultural riches by modeling their legislation upon that of Germany, they have reckoned in a large measure without their host. In Germany the whole matter is under governmental control. A single house takes all the agricultural alcohol that is made. The princes and magnates of Germany are the people who control and own the whole industry. Compared with the magnificent, widespread area of the United States, Germany is only a corner not larger than the State of New York, with a crowded population; and to suppose that the farmers of the United States, who are emphatically a scattered nation in the myriad places which they occupy, remote from railroads, and also remote in many instances from the great streams which furnish transportation, can successfully work a system which belongs to a small, compact country and which has grown up in the track of years by experimentation is, Mr. President, almost to look for the falling of the skies and for the catching of larks.

We are told by some Senators that it will not do to send an internal-revenue officer to stand sentinel over the farmers of this country. "Hands off!" say they to the Internal-Revenue Commissioner. Why? They certainly do not mean to intimate that the farmers of this country, as a rule at least, are at all likely to try to beat the revenue of this country by passing their alcohol into illegitimate channels or trading it away in an improper manner. So far as the mass of the farmers of this country are concerned, I, like they, believe they might be trusted, and this is true about the great majority of men of all classes. We do not have policemen and build jails and enact severe penalties that will ever be applicable to the great majority of our fellow-citizens. But we do have to create these establishments, and we do have to make these laws, and we do have to take these precautions and erect these guards for that small minority of our fellow-citizens who, without such precautions, would overcome the influences of good society, take what did not belong to them, and cheat whosoever they could.

And so in this case, while the majority of the farmers, and especially those who are dealing in the smaller distilleries, might be worthy of trust, and while no trouble might arise from them, a system which puts the distillation of spirits in legitimate ways under strict surveillance and withdraws all surveillance, or all but occasional surveillance, from the residue is open to objection of a duplex form. First, it is unjust to our own revenue.

We draw annually $137,000,000 from the legitimate production of spirits, and if we are going to have widespread, here, there, and everywhere all over this land, the free, the open, the uninspected or little inspected production of the alcohol base of spirits, is it not a self-evident proposition that with the gates wide open alcohol will flow and be constantly tempted to flow into illegitimate channels, to the detriment of the revenues of this country?

And more than that, Mr. President, when a business man respecting the laws of the land establishes his plant, spends his money, and pay his taxes like a good citizen, does not the Government owe it to him to see that he shall not be exposed to the hand of the spoilsman and that the illegitimate shall not reap where he has sown?

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue fully understands this and has set it forth in a letter which I have before me. Here is what he says in furtherance of the policy indicated by the amendment which the committee has proposed to this bill. This letter has already been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I read from it as follows:

> The honest distiller would want him (the Government official) constantly present. The dishonest distiller would prefer to have him absent as many days as possible.

Now, why?

> Alcohol pays a tax of $2 a wine gallon, and it is absolutely necessary to put up every barrier possible against fraud, now that under the law it can be withdrawn free of this tax for certain purposes.
> If it were possible to find a denaturing agent that could not be removed from the alcohol by process of redistillation, by passing over charcoal bodies, and by other chemical processes, then it would not be so necessary to guard every step of the new process.

Then he concludes:

> There must be governmental supervision and surveillance to prevent the alcohol from being secretly and surreptitiously taken from the distillery where produced without the payment of tax and to prevent, after it has been denatured, its reclamation through chemical process and its restoration to its original alcoholic condition.

So, Mr. President, this recommendation of the committee is made with the firm and strong urgency of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States, or at least in furtherance of the principles and the analysis which he presents in this letter, a part of which will be found on page 36 of the hearings before the Senate committee.

I do not wish to prolong my remarks and will abstain from setting forth many considerations which could be easily gathered from papers and statements and testimonies which have been given in this regard. It should be noted, however, that the difference in tax in this country and in Germany is another differentiation between the situations in the two countries. The tax in Germany is 35 cents per gallon, whereas in this country it is $1.10 per proof gallon and $2.07 on alcohol. The conclusion from this differentiation is that as a matter of monetary consideration the temptation to fraud is over five times as great in this country as in Germany.

It is said that the farmer can get over the difficulty of the transportation of his alcohol to the bonded warehouse where it can be denatured by putting it in tank cars. Undoubtedly those who control tank cars, who can furnish them sometimes and who can not furnish them at other times, will have a good thing in the trade brought to them. Where a farm is located close to a railroad and where the farmer can easily get the alcohol made upon his farm carried to the tank car, his position may be improved by this bill. But that is not the case with the great majority of the farmers of this country. Very few of them are so happily situated as to be able to avail themselves of those conditions.

Mr. President, I hope it is true, as we have been led to believe, that the introduction of the denaturing of alcohol is going to open an avenue of industry and of profit to the farmers of the United States. Of all classes of the American people I believe the farmers do more for the general prosperity and for the wholesome patriotic spirit of this country in proportion to what benefits they receive from lawmakers than any other portion of our population. I should welcome, and, indeed, it would give joy to my heart to see any law adopted that would enhance their prosperity and enable them to keep abreast with the progress of our times which is so great in other branches of human occupation.

But I do not wish at any time to be a party to deluding them with the impression that they have found a gold mine, when we can hardly base a substantial prophecy to a larger result than that this may open to their industry a new branch of endeavor, and may, after being worthily and intelligently cultivated, prove to them a new source of profit. But I do not believe in blind speculation or in speculation based upon hasty and immature suggestion or built up upon foundations which have not been surely tested.

If I were to vote for this bill, either with or without the provision for the superintendence of the agricultural distilleries by the officers of the revenue, I should cast my vote with misgiving. We already know that it is looked to to make another experiment next year. The whole subject is so befogged with the testimonies of conflicting interests that it is hard for anyone who has not had greater opportunity of research and reflection than I have had to form a clear and positive opinion. I incline to the opinion that it might be better to let this bill go over until the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall further study this case and until those who are to prepare the law upon the subject shall give it more profound meditation. If the bill should pass, I hope it will pass with the small amendment I have suggested as to ether, and I apprehend if we do pass it, it will lead, as did the bill of last year, to a speedy sequel in seeking here new emendations and probably a reversal again of the doctrines upon which it is founded.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for five minutes that I may report from the Committee on Commerce four bills.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will yield if it does not lead to debate.

Mr. FRYE. It will lead to no debate. My bills are never debated.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield.

DAMS ACROSS THE SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25848) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Andersonville Shoals, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The bill was read the first time by its title; and the Secretary proceeded to read it the second time at length.

Mr. FRYE. There is no need of reading these bills. They are identical, word for word, with four Senate bills which were passed yesterday.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I shall have to object to that. A bill certainly ought to be read.

Mr. FRYE. Every one of these bills was read in the Senate yesterday, and passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not these House bills.

Mr. FRYE. These identical bills.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not the House bills. It will not take many minutes to read them. I do not think we had better adopt the precedent of not reading bills.

The bill was read the second time at length; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25850) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Trotters Shoals, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The bill was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25846) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Calhoun Falls, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The bill was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25847) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Hattons Ford, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The bill was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the bill (S. 8581) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Trotters Shoals, the bill (S. 8583) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Calhoun Falls, the bill (S. 8572) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Andersonville Shoals, and the bill (S. 8584) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Hattons Ford, passed yesterday, identical with the four bills just passed, be recalled from the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES A. CARROLL.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8699) for the relief of James A. Carroll, to report it favorably without amendment. On behalf of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG], I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not think the Senator can do that under the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has the floor in his own right, and is now occupying it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Has the Senator from Maine finished?

Mr. HOPKINS. He has finished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has finished.

Mr. HOPKINS. This will take but a moment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have declined to yield to several other Senators who asked me for the same privilege; but as the Senator has made the report, I will yield.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Postmaster-General to cause the accounts of James A. Carroll, postmaster at Randall, Kans., to be credited with the sum of $99, being on account of the loss of $99 in postal funds lost in transit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DENATURED ALCOHOL.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I call for the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24816) to amend an act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, page 4, line 4, after "distilleries," it is proposed to insert:

Except the provisions of section 3284 of the Revised Statutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

Mr. ALDRICH obtained the floor.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas rise to debate the pending question?

Mr. CULBERSON. Not if the Senator from Rhode Island desires to discuss it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; I do desire to discuss it; but I will yield to the Senator if he desires to go on.

Mr. CULBERSON. My purpose was simply to make a suggestion as to the vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I desire on behalf of the committee to make some response to the suggestions which have been made by the Senator from Oregon and the two Senators from North Dakota and the Senator from Montana as to the effect which the amendment suggested by the committee would have upon the practical operation of the law.

The Senators, especially the Senator from North Dakota, said that it would be impossible, or practically impossible, to have the storekeepers present, without long delay and serious inconvenience, at the time farm distilleries would be in operation, his idea being that on rainy afternoons and evenings and any time when the farmer had two or three hours at his disposal he would enter upon the work of distilling 8 or 10 gallons of alcohol, either for his own use or for sale, and that he could not do this under this bill if the amendment of the committee were adopted.

As the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] pointed out yesterday, distillation is a continuous process and requires three days for completion. It can not be done on a rainy afternoon. It can not be done at odd hours, when there is nothing else to be done. When it is once commenced, it must continue for three days consecutively, and therefore the suggestion as to the nature of the work the farmer might do is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ALDRICH. For a question.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he is familiar with the process of making alcohol?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am more or less familiar with it. I have had occasion to study it for a long time. But I have never been present in a distillery when alcohol was being made.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let me say this, for the information of the Senator:

The farmer who has a small still comes in from the fields when it rains and he starts his mill and grinds some corn. It may be for one hour or two hours or three hours. If the sun comes out again, he goes back to his field. If it rains again, he takes the corn meal which he has ground and he puts it into a vat and makes mash of it. When the sun comes out again, he goes back to his field. In due course of time that mash becomes sour, and when it rains again the farmer goes in and puts water in the vat, and so on until he prepares what is known as the "beer" or the "wort" for the still. That is the way the farmer puts in those two hours when it rains and he can not work in the field.

Under the amendment which is in this bill and which the Senator wants to keep in the bill the farmer could not do any of those things unless there was a storekeeper present when he ground his corn and made his mash and prepared the material to make the alcohol.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am sorry the Senator from North Dakota is not a more accurate instructor.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I should like to have the Senator explain wherein I have made any misstatement.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are several processes which the Senator did not mention.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This is one.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are several that the Senator did not mention, and his suggestion as to the method is not accurate. Of course the grain has to be ground. There is no doubt about that. It might be ground for distillery purposes without the presence of an officer. It is put into a vat and the process of fermentation is commenced; this goes on continuously after it has once commenced. A man can not go in and stop the process of fermentation, if he happens to have something else to do or if it does not happen to be a rainy day. After fermentation and distillation the spirits go under this to a locked tank, and then for the production of alcohol there has to be redistillation.

For this there has to be different machinery, altogether outside of ordinary distilling machinery for the production of distilled spirits. The process has to go on, whatever may be the occupation or the engagements of the distiller.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield for a question for information?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the bill as now reported by the committee would it or would it not be necessary for the storekeeper to be present during the grinding of this material and the using of it in any way?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not unless the grinding was done on the distillery premises.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose the farmer has a distillery in his granary, or a part of it. He has his corn there where it is up for the winter, and he commences his work there and grinds it there and he puts it into a vat there. Under the bill is it not necessary for the storekeeper to be present?

Mr. ALDRICH. Under the law as it now stands every operation, if it is carried on within the distillery premises, is under the direction and control of a Government officer.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, is not my colleague's statement absolutely true that if the farmer should come in from his farm during a rain and wanted to put in two hours toward grinding of this corn in the distillery, wherever he wants to use it in the same building, he would have to have a storekeeper or inspector present?

Mr. ALDRICH. If it was in the distillery; yes. I have already answered that question. If it was outside the distillery, no.

Mr. McCUMBER. If he had it in two separate buildings, the distillery would mean the building in which the distilling was done, would it not?

Mr. ALDRICH. Exactly. It is all set forth in great detail in the law as it stands as to what the distillery shall be.

Mr. McCUMBER. The provision of the law reads:

> That every distiller or person employed in any distillery who, in the absence of a storekeeper, or person designated to act as storekeeper, uses, or causes or permits to be used, any material for the purpose of making mash, wort, or beer, or for the production of spirits—

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from North Dakota does not need to read that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want to call the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The language of the section is absolutely explicit.

Mr. McCUMBER. Therefore the Senator says it must be done in the presence of the storekeeper.

Mr. ALDRICH. Any step the distiller takes in the distillation of spirits must be done with the presence of a storekeeper.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not only the distilling, but all the things that must precede the distilling?

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. The fermentation is not distilling.

Mr. ALDRICH. Fermentation is the process of distilling.

Mr. McCUMBER. It precedes it.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is an essential part of the process of distillation.

The next reason given by these Senators for objecting to this provision is that it would be very inconvenient, if not impossible, to send for a storekeeper or Government inspector when the farmer desired to commence the operation of distilling. I stated yesterday, and I repeat that statement to-day on the authority of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that under no circumstances whatever would he think of permitting operations in one of these stills to be commenced without the presence of a Government officer, that he would insist that the distillery should be inspected first, and that the commencement of operations should be in the presence of a storekeeper or some other officer who would discharge the duties of a storekeeper.

So all this talk about the inconvenience of sending for a Government officer to be present when this operation is commenced might as well be eliminated from this discussion. The Commissioner says that under no circumstances would he think of permitting distilling to be commenced without the presence of an officer. Therefore the only question here is as to whether, after the officer gets there, he shall remain to supervise and inspect the business of distilling while this is going on.

Both the Senators from North Dakota seem to think that you can commence this process and then arrest nature at some stage in it to meet the conditions of the weather or the convenience of the distiller. It can not be done.

I wish to say further to both those Senators that it requires great skill and knowledge to properly conduct the various operations connected with the production of alcohol. Distillers pay large salaries to men who watch and superintend the process at its various stages. I imagine there is not a farmer in North Dakota, unless he was instructed, who could undertake successfully to make alcohol out of any kind of material which he might have. This requires a technical knowledge. I assume in this connection that the Government storekeeper instead of being a hindrance to the farmer would be really of great help to him.

It seems to me that all this talk about the inconvenience or impossibility of getting storekeepers goes for nothing.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Under the bill as it comes from the House and as it is without the amendment proposed by the Finance Committee, if it shall develop that it is necessary in the interest of the Government to have these storekeepers there the Commissioner can assign one. It is not necessary in order to give the Commissioner authority to adopt this amendment. Without the amendment it is in the discretion of the Commissioner to assign a storekeeper if it shall develop that it is necessary. But the amendment requires him to do it whether it shall be necessary or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. FULTON. I beg the Senator's pardon; I think it does.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Oregon think if the Commissioner should decide that the interest of the Government or the protection of the revenue required the storekeeper to be present that that would vitiate this bill and destroy its effect?

Mr. FULTON. I think it would destroy the effect that is desired; it would prevent the result that is sought. I do think that.

Mr. ALDRICH. In what way would it destroy the effect?

Mr. FULTON. I have been over that ground, and I do not want to take up the Senator's time to explain it. I think the Senator fully understands my position. I will simply say now that it is not necessary in order to have the storekeeper assigned to have the amendment. If it shall develop that it is necessary to protect the rights of the Government to have a storekeeper, the Commissioner can assign one.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Commissioner himself asserts that he will, under no circumstances, think of allowing a distillery to commence operations until it has been properly inspected and unless an officer is present to superintend the initial operations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator this question: We will suppose that there are 10,000 farmers owning 10,000 different stills, and they all wish to commence about the same time. Does the Senator believe that there will be 10,000 inspectors furnished to be present at each place?

Mr. ALDRICH. Why not? There must be, even if the amendment of the committee should not be adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Simply because we have not got funds enough to pay them.

Mr. ALDRICH. They would have to be present under the law as it now stands. Does the Senator say the Government has not funds enough to pay 10,000 inspectors?

Mr. McCUMBER. We have not appropriated enough to pay 10,000 inspectors.

Mr. ALDRICH. There will not be 10,000 distilleries in existence in this country immediately. I suppose the Senator does not think there will. I presume we will have an opportunity to appropriate money for that purpose before we shall have 10,000 distilleries.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator that I think to have one inspector for every little still in the country would be committing this country to the worst character of exravagance, where we would be paying thousands of dollars and getting nothing whatever in return.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a new argument.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not a new argument.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a new argument. As I stated yesterday, if one of these distillers, in the process of running his product from the distillery to the tank, should subtract 1 gallon a day, the loss of revenue would equal the sum paid the storekeeper. These storekeepers are paid during their services, and at the small distilleries they are paid $2 a day. In the mountain districts of North Carolina and in other communities where small stills are located, the minimum pay is $2 a day. They are paid only while they are actually at work. There is no trouble whatever in securing any number of inspectors or storekeepers for this work. When not engaged in inspecting they are engaged in their regular occupation, whatever it may be. As a matter of practical operation, there is no difficulty whatever in securing this inspection whenever and as long as it is wanted in any part of the United States.

I should be glad to have any Senator give a reason why these precautions should not be adopted and why these inspectors should not be present when these distilleries are in operation. The Senators first insisted it would not be convenient. They then insisted that storekeepers could not be found, and then that it would cost a very large sum of money, and altogether that the presence of storekeepers would in some mysterious way prevent the operation of these small distilleries. There is not one line in this amendment or in the bill which creates a single obstacle in the way of the production of alcohol in these small distilleries, either in the way of expense or otherwise.

The presence of these storekeepers would, in my judgment, be an assistance to small distillers.

Now, as to my own attitude and that of the Finance Committee to the bill under consideration, both the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] have said that there was no member of the committee who was not heartily in favor of the ideas which are involved in this legislation. We believe there should be, in the public interest, the greatest possible use, consistent with safety to the revenue, of alcohol for use in the arts and in the industries free of tax. There is no member of the committee who is not heartily in favor of the objects sought by the adoption of this fourth section, giving additional privileges to small distilleries.

I can not imagine a man who would be so shortsighted as to say, if it were possible in any community to establish these distilleries and carry them on with safety to the revenue, they should not be carried on. I can see that very great advantage to both producer and consumer would come from the successful production of alcohol in this manner. If it can be produced at the price the Senators say it can, and in the way they say it can, the benefit to the country at large and to every community in the country as well as to individual consumers will be very great. But that being true, can any Senator give me a good reason why the revenue should not be protected, when it can be done without delaying or imperiling the object sought and without any expense or hindrance to those who operate these small distilleries?

This amendment, then, has only this one purpose, to provide an effective safeguard for the Government during the trial of this experiment, because there is no Senator who will assert that this is not an experiment. It is not offered in any spirit of antagonism to the purpose of the bill, which has my hearty support and that of the other Members of the committee that reported it. We do not offer it with any intention to delay the possible consummation of the objects its friends have in view. If frauds upon the revenue follow this legislation the experiment will result disastrously to the hopes of all those who believe that very great good will surely come to the industries of the country if they are permitted the use of alcohol free of tax.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we had better have a vote by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The question as I understand it is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending question.

Mr. CARTER. Those opposed to the amendment will vote "nay," and those in favor of it will vote "yea."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. CARTER. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber, and I do not know what the question is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee on page 4 of the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I do not know whether any transfer can be made so as to enable me to vote. For the present I withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARNER (when Mr. STONE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Chamber by sickness.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am informed that I can transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER. I was requested to state that the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent, and that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. KITTREDGE (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado, and for that reason I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CLAPP. My colleague [Mr. NELSON] is detained at his home by illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. KITTREDGE. I am assured that my general pair, the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] would, if present, vote "nay," and therefore I will permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 47, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HEMENWAY subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to say that I was unexpectedly called from the Chamber to attend a meeting of a conference committee when the vote on the denatured-alcohol bill was taken. I am in favor of the bill and would have voted for it had I been present.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25483) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 14, 16, 21, 22, 23, 32, 35, 39, 40, and 41.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 34, 36, 37, and 38, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "one hundred and five" and insert "ninety-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "one hundred" and insert "eighty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The report was agreed to.

ST. JOSEPH RIVER DAM, MICHIGAN.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25832) to authorize Herman L. Hartenstein to construct a dam across the St. Joseph River, near the village of Mottville, St. Joseph County, Mich., to report it without amendment, and I invite the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to that fact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the report will be received.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BIRCHIE O. MAHAFFEY, AND OTHERS.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23630) authorizing the President to nominate and appoint Birchie O. Mahaffey, John A. Cleveland, and Traugett F. Keller as second lieutenants in the United States Army, to report it without amendment; and as it consists of only five lines I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Birchie O. Mahaffey, John A. Cleveland, and Traugett F. Keller as second lieutenants in the United States Army, notwithstanding the bar of age.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the marked portions of the report on this case made by Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on Military Affairs in the House of Representatives, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT OF THE MILITARY SECRETARY.

The records of this Office afford information in these cases as follows:

The following-named five cadets of the class of 1902, United States Military Academy, were discharged, by War Department orders, May 21, 1901, for insubordination or hazing: Henry L. Bowlby, of Nebraska; John A. Cleveland, of Alabama; Traugett F. Keller, of New York; Raymond A. Linton, of Michigan, and Birchie O. Mahaffey, of Texas. In February, 1905, Representative MORRIS SHEPPARD handed to the President a letter from General Mills, superintendent of the academy, of December 27, 1904, favoring the appointment of these dismissed cadets in the Army. February 25, 1905, the Secretary of War advised Mr. SHEPPARD that the President had handed him the letter from General Mills in regard to the appointment of these young men, and said:

"I suggest that the proper course for them" [the five ex-cadets] "to pursue is to file applications with the War Department setting forth all the facts, and also a statement of what they have done since they were dismissed, and I will bring the matter to the attention of the President, who, upon the facts as presented, is favorable to the granting of their applications should there be vacancies enough."

In March, 1905, Mr. Mahaffey's father and several citizens of Texas petitioned, through Representative SHEPPARD, for his appointment as second lieutenant, and on April 8 the Secretary of War advised Mr. SHEPPARD that he would unhesitatingly recommend Mr. Mahaffey's appointment only for the fact that he had become disqualified on account of age.

In the meantime Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Keller had also become ineligible for appointment on account of age, leaving only Mr. Bowlby and Mr. Linton on the eligible list. The appointment of the two latter was urged from time to time by Representatives SHEPPARD of Texas; HINSHAW, of Nebraska, and FORDNEY, of Michigan. Subsequently Messrs. Bowlby and Linton were designated for examination for appointment with the other civilian candidates at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in December last, but it appears that both had obtained satisfactory employment and did not desire the appointment, and hence declined the designation.

In December last Representative SHEPPARD reminded the Secretary of War of his statement of April 8, 1905, that he would have recommended Mr. Mahaffey's appointment only for the fact that he had become disqualified on account of age, and requested the Secretary to make a statement to the same effect in the cases of Cleveland and Keller. In reply to this the Secretary of War advised Mr. SHEPPARD, December 27, 1906:

"That were it not for the disqualification on account of age I would have also recommended the appointment of Messrs. Cleveland and Keller, with the approval of the President."

The present ages of the three persons named in the bill are: Cleveland, 30 years and 10 months; Mahaffey, 29 years and 7 months, and Keller, 27 years and 10 months. The age limit fixed by regulations for candidates for appointment as second lieutenants is 27 years, but this is a matter of regulation, not of law.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Military Secretary.

PATRICK NADDY.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20128) to complete the naval record of Patrick Naddy, to report it favorably without amendment, and as it is a bill of only eight lines, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to so amend the naval record of Patrick Naddy, late first-class boy, United States Navy, on United States receiving ship North Carolina and U. S. S. Galena and Princeton, as to show him honorably discharged, to date from June 30, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 240) to create a joint committee to consider the revision and codification of the laws of the United States, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that a joint special committee be appointed, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice-President from Members of the Sixtieth Congress, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker from the Members of the Sixtieth Congress, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws reported by the statutory revision commission heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, including the laws of the last session of the Fifty-ninth Congress; and that the said joint committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary assistants, to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expense as may be deemed necessary, all such expense to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL-LAND LOCATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17415) to authorize the assignees of coal-land locations to make entries under the coal-land laws applicable to Alaska. I called the bill up this morning. I think there will be no objection to it now. The bill has been read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the bill be again read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill, at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, it is quite evident that some explanation will have to be made of that bill, and as the bill was first reported by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who is absent on account of temporary illness, as I understand, I object to its present consideration.

Mr. FULTON. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment. This bill has been explained several times, and I think the Senate pretty thoroughly understands it. It is one in which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has taken a very deep interest, because he has studied the subject very carefully and very profoundly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will withdraw my objection, but I reserve the right to renew it. If the bill leads to debate, I shall have to object.

Mr. SCOTT. I will renew the objection, because it is a bill of too great importance to be taken up now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

HOURS OF LABOR OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. PENROSE. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon, and ask that the same be printed for the information of the Senate. I give notice that I will call it up to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In line 3, page 1, strike out the word "and" and insert "or" in said amendment.

In line 13, page 1, strike out the word "corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the words "common carrier" in said amendment.

In line 13, page 2 of said amendment, after the word "continue," insert "or can go;" and in the same line strike out the four concluding words of said line, reading "or go on duty."

In line 14, page 2, of said amendment, after the word "eight," insert the word "consecutive."

In lines 14 and 15, page 2, strike out the words "within such twenty-four-hour period."

In line 15, page 2, strike out the concluding word "operator."

In line 16, page 2, after the word "dispatcher," insert the words "or dispatcher's operator in the dispatcher's office."

In lines 17 and 18, page 2, strike out "dispatches reports, transmits, receives, or delivers" and insert in lieu thereof "issues."

In line 20, page 2, strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

In lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, page 2, strike out the words "in all towers, offices, places, and stations continuously operated night and day, nor for a longer period than thirteen hours in all towers, offices, places, and stations operated only during the daytime" and insert in lieu thereof "and that no employee who by the use of the telegraph or telephone transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements (excepting those who issue train orders) or who is charged with the operation of signals or switches from towers, offices, or stations shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than twelve hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period."

In line 9, page 3, after the word "suits," insert the words "to be."

In line 13, page 3, strike out the word "verified."

In line 15, page 3, strike out the words "three years" and insert "one year."

In line 21, page 3, after the word "of," insert the word "all;" and in the same line strike out the words "duly authorized" and insert in lieu thereof the words "officers and."

In line 24, page 3, after the word "its," insert the words "officer or."

In lines 1 and 2, page 4, strike out the words "with the exercise of reasonable prudence."

Strike out all of lines 7 and 8, page 4, and insert in lieu thereof "and all powers granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby extended to it in the execution of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

BOIES PENROSE,
FRANK P. FLINT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. P. HEPBURN,
J. S. SHERMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I hope that the bill will be printed as proposed to be amended by the conference committee.

Mr. PENROSE. In connection with the report I join with the Senator from Illinois in the request for unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a copy of the bill as it will read with the amendments proposed by the conferees. I will have the bill prepared for the Public Printer in a short time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill as proposed to be amended by the conferees is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers, their officers, agents, and employees, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad in the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States, or from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States. The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any common carrier operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "employees" as used in this act shall be held to mean persons actually engaged in or connected with the movement of any train.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act to require or permit any employee subject to this act to be or remain on duty for a longer period than sixteen consecutive hours, and whenever any such employee of such common carrier shall have been continuously on duty for sixteen hours he shall be relieved and not required or permitted again to go on duty until he has had at least ten consecutive hours off duty; and no such employee who has been on duty sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period shall be required or permitted to continue or again go on duty, without having had at least eight consecutive hours off duty: Provided, That no train dispatcher or dispatcher's operator in the dispatcher's office or other employee who by the use of the telegraph or telephone issues orders pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than eight hours in any twenty-four-hour period, and that no employee who by the use of the telegraph or telephone transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements (excepting those who issue train orders), or who is charged with the operation of signals or switches from towers, offices, or stations shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than twelve hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period, except in case of emergency, when the employees named in this proviso may be permitted to be and remain on duty for four additional hours in a twenty-four-hour period on not exceeding three consecutive days in any week.

SEC. 3. That any such common carrier, or any officer or agent thereof, requiring or permitting any employee to go, be, or remain on duty in violation of the second section hereof, shall be liable to a penalty of not to exceed $500 for each and every violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon satisfactory information being lodged with him; but no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge. dent or the act of God; nor where the delay was the result of a cause not known to the carrier or its officers or agent in charge of such employee at the time said employee left a terminal, and which could not have been foreseen: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the crews of wrecking or relief trains.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to execute and enforce the provisions of this act, and all powers granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby extended to it in the execution of this act.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be in force one year after its passage.

UNION STATION.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 9329.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I prefer that the Senator should wait until the bill is taken up for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9329) to amend an act approved February 28, 1903, entitled "An act to provide for a union station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Mr. KEAN. I hope that that will not be done at the present time, as that bill will create a great deal of discussion.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, if I can have the attention of the Senate for a few minutes—one minute will be enough for me—I desire to state that on the 16th of February——

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that debate is not in order upon the pending motion.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I trust that the opponents of this bill will not undertake to take me off my feet and thus deny me the usual courtesies of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. The rules of the Senate take the Senator off his feet, and not any Senator.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I know; but those rules can sometimes be resorted to for purposes that are somewhat questionable.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak for one minute.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota has not yielded the floor. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Pennsylvania when the Senator from North Dakota yields the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. I understood that debate was out of order and that the Senator from North Dakota was not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota was recognized to make a motion. He made a motion and requested permission of the Senate to make a statement for one minute. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I was about to say that on February 16, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I reported to the Senate a bill which had passed the House of Representatives unanimously, and I asked unanimous consent that it be considered. Unanimous consent was given and the bill was considered and it was passed here. I retired from the Chamber, and about ten minutes afterwards a Senator came in and moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that motion was agreed to.

Mr. President, I have not felt quite right about this matter since that time, for the reason that it seemed to me that common courtesy would have demanded that the Senator who moved to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed should have allowed that motion to rest while the Senator who had secured the passage of the bill was away from the Chamber. So the bill went to the Calendar, and has been resting there ever since under Rule IX, requiring a motion to take it up before it can be laid before the Senate. I make that motion at this time.

Mr. President, let me state further that this bill extends the smoke law in the District of Columbia to all locomotive engines in the District. It does not require the electrification of any railroad in the District, but it requires the railroad corporations owning the locomotives to do precisely what the people in this District have been required to do for several years past. That is all there is to it.

I will leave the matter with the Senate, and if the Senate desires to take up the bill I shall be very glad to discuss it. If it desires to vote the motion down, of course, I shall have to abide the result.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement covering one or two minutes in connection with this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply desire to say, Mr. President, that this bill was reported not with the concurrence of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and if it is taken up it will lead to a very lengthy discussion. The Senate can do about it as it pleases.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DANIEL. Just a moment.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator yield to me for a statement about the order of business?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, am I not entitled to a vote on the motion I made that the Senate take up a bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not pending a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill is being put into form by the clerk. It will be here in a few minutes, and if the Senate goes into a session for executive business, when that report is ready I shall hope that the Senate will return to the consideration of legislative business in order that we may take up that report, which of course is very important in connection with the absolutely necessary business of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

Mr. PENROSE. I renew my motion, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. CARTER. I call for the question.

Mr. SCOTT. It is not fair to those of us who have been waiting here with bills expecting to be recognized to be thus taken off our feet.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania insist upon his motion?

Mr. PENROSE. I insist upon my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE ADAMS.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the Senate shall have considered the resolutions relative to the death of the Hon. JOHN F. RIXEY, of Virginia, I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider resolutions relative to the death of the late Hon. HENRY C. ADAMS, a Representative in Congress from Wisconsin.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE KETCHAM.

Mr. DEPEW. I wish to give notice that on Saturday, the 2d instant, following the eulogies on the late Representative ADAMS, I will ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the life, character, and public services of Hon. JOHN H. KETCHAM, late a Representative from the State of New York.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The notice will be entered.

UNION STATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9329) to amend an act approved February 28, 1903, entitled "An act to provide for a union station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am willing to take the yeas and nays, if they are desired.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the motion be put.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CLAY. I suggest to the Senator that it will be utterly impossible to get a vote on the bill to-day. I am sure it will be discussed for hours.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which has been stated.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This is not a debatable question.

Mr. LODGE. Regular order!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was not agreed to.

SENECA NATION OF INDIANS.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8540) to ratify a certain lease with the Seneca Nation of Indians. It is only six lines long.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It ratifies and confirms a lease bearing date September 21, 1906, between the Seneca Nation of Indians on the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, in the State of New York, and Charles M. L. Ashby, of Erie County, N. Y.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the message from the House on the naval appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting on its disagreement to the amendment No. 1 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24925) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. HALE. I was about to move that the Senate recede from its amendment, but I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation to the Senate as to what is involved in this item, and I shall content myself with a mere statement of the facts and then rely on the good judgment of this body to do whatever it sees fit.

The item involves an appropriation of $50,000 to enable the Navy Department to utilize as a training station the land and buildings already at Port Royal. There are, I believe, five training stations already in existence; four I know; two on the Great Lakes under construction; one at Coasters Harbor, near Newport, and one on the Pacific coast. There is none at all in the South. Some twenty years ago or thereabouts the United States entered upon the construction of a naval station at Port Royal and expended, all told, in the neighborhood of a million and a half dollars there, some $475,000 of which was for the construction of a great dry dock made of wood. The balance of the appropriation, amounting to over $900,000, was spent in the building of a steel wharf, a coaling plant, of large brick buildings for the various departments of the Navy—engineering, construction, and repair, officers' quarters, and all that sort of thing. And those buildings are new. About $900,000 was spent in the purchase of land and in the erection of these buildings for the use of the proposed navy-yard.

Some seven years ago the Navy Department of its own motion suggested that Charleston was a better place than Port Royal, and the Senate and the House agreed to the appointment of a board of officers by the Secretary of the Navy to consider the relative advantages of the two places and determine which was the better at which to build a navy-yard. That board, with the exception of one, reported in favor of Charleston.

Thereupon Congress authorized the transfer of the Port Royal station to Charleston, and there has been no money spent at Port Royal since, except to take care of the Government property there. There is a small force of marines or care takers, possibly fifteen or twenty men; I do not know just how many, but a very insignificant number. There are there these large new buildings, with this magnificent wharf and all the appliances for a training station already in existence, already paid for, and in a climate which enables the use of water in the training of the seamen practically every day in the year, because there never is any ice there in the salt water and never or rarely any in the fresh water.

This item merely proposes—and it is at the suggestion of the Navy Department and at the request of the Bureau of Navigation—that the Government shall appropriate $50,000, which will enable them to adapt these buildings to the use of the Navy, in changing these large brick structures to barracks, so as to enable them to quarter the recruits when they shall have been enlisted and go into training.

The cause of this suggestion on the part of the Navy Department for the utilization of these buildings is this: Two years ago an epidemic of meningitis broke out at Newport, and Admiral Converse, in his hearing before the House committee, stated that the danger of the spread of that disease among recruits caused him to transfer 3,000 men to Norfolk and camp them in tents. Therefore he requested that the Senate should put an item in the last appropriation bill providing for the changing of Port Royal into a training station.

When the House disagreed to it last summer and resisted the amendment, the Secretary of the Navy, after adjournment of Congress, by executive order transferred these buildings to the Bureau of Navigation, taking all the other bureaus out of any association or connection with Port Royal; and this $50,000 is simply the money necessary to build the latrines and wash houses and prepare these buildings as barracks for the use of the recruits. This is one of the most economical and legitimate items of expenditure in the entire naval appropriation bill. It did not come at my instance. I was not here last year when the Naval Committee of the Senate put this item in the bill. I was not in Washington. I was sick.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. It seems to me that the Senator has made a very clear and convincing statement of the reasons why this amendment should remain in the bill; and I will ask him to state the objections to it, if any objection has been urged.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I judge by the debate in the House day before yesterday, when this report was carried there and this one item disagreed to, the fear is that South Carolina will have two great naval establishments, and there are so many places which have none that there is an idea that this place, which has cost a million dollars, and is worth a million dollars, should be abandoned because South Carolina might have a navy-yard at Charleston and a training station at Port Royal. That is all I can see. If we were going into the business of building a new training station and were not merely utilizing the Government property already paid for and already constructed, I would not say a word. It could go to Texas or Florida or Georgia or North Carolina or Alabama or some other State. But we have got it. It is there. It is paid for. It is healthful. Why should we not use it?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. Has the Senator any idea or intimation that if the motion of the Senator from Maine should be disagreed to there is a probability of an agreement being reached by the conferees?

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly the conferees will agree. Of course if the House insists again the Senate will recede, as it did last year. I do not make any kick. I simply want the country and the Senate and the House to understand that this item, put on this bill by the Senate committee last year, not at my instance, but of its own wisdom, ought to remain in the bill this year, and the House ought to be made to understand, which I do not think they do, that there is no purpose or desire on the part of South Carolina to have two great naval stations, but merely to utilize this one for the purpose for which the Bureau of Navigation has asked and let Charleston take her chances along with the other navy-yards of the country in getting any appropriation of Congress that it may be willing to give it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to emphasize the fact that while the amendment was put on in the absence of the Senator last year, this year it was put on by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir; the Senator from Maine and the Senator from California, the other two conferees, have stood by this item as a perfectly legitimate and wise one, and all I ask is that the Senate itself shall indicate its attitude, and then if the House says it will not have it the Senate can give way, if it sees fit. There is no trouble about getting another conference between the two Houses, and let us go back to the House after the Senate has acted. I hope the Senator from Maine will not move that the Senate recede, but that he will move that the Senate insist on its amendment, and let us take a yea-and-nay vote on it and let the House see how the Senate feels on the subject.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senate should understand precisely the situation. There has always been in the House a very strong feeling against in any way making further appropriations for Port Royal, which was abandoned as a navy-yard when the navy-yard was transferred to Charleston. That was done—and I thought very properly—solely at the instance of the Senator from South Carolina. The House has always taken the ground that that closed the incident.

In this case, both last year and this, the proposition came up without intrusion or importunity from the Senator from South Carolina, but from the Department, that the old plant could be utilized to some extent by using it as a training station for boys preparing for the Navy in winter. It went through all the phases of difference, and the House insisted on its proposition, and it went out.

This year the Department recommended it again.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is estimated for.

Mr. HALE. It is recommended and estimated for. The Department put itself behind it. It recommended this appropriation, and the Senate committee put it on and reported it. It came to the body, was adopted in the Senate, and then went into conference.

I am bound to state what took place in conference. In conference the Senate conferees insisted upon the amendment, so far as they could, believing that it was a proper amendment. We did it in the absence of the Senator from South Carolina, who again has not intruded in the matter. But the House conferees said that the House was firm and would never agree in any way to reopen the old abandoned navy-yard which has been left for Charleston.

Then the House conferees said: "As you can not agree to this, all we ask is to take it into the House and have it debated there, and if the House, on full debate, holds to its old position and insists that this shall go out, the Senate, we think, will take notice of that."

It went to the House, was debated at length by the Representatives from South Carolina, making the best of the case they could, and the House by a vote of about two to one again insisted on its disagreement.

Mr. TILLMAN. Altogether there were but 110 votes cast.

Mr. HALE. But the votes in the House in Committee of the Whole are frequently small. However, the majority was about two to one.

Everything else has been agreed to on the naval bill, with its hundred million dollars. I should be glad to get what the Senator wants, and I hope some day we will get it, but I do not think there is the slightest chance, after the House has debated it and voted upon it, that anything will happen if we insist on sending it over there again.

The great naval bill is agreed to on everything else. Nothing remains but this amendment, and I am sorry that the Senator under the conditions does not feel like yielding to what is the inevitable. It will only cause another conference, and if we send it back there will be more and more feeling of impatience on the part of the House of Representatives after the thing has been once debated and voted upon there. I wish the Senator would acquiesce in what is the actual condition and let the Senate recede from its amendment and end the controversy on this bill. I think the Senator will gain nothing by any other course.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have indicated my willingness to be reasonable, I think, and the Senator has done me the justice to say that I am not importuning him about this matter and have not from the start. It is not my baby or my pet. I am not particularly desirous of this on account of South Carolina, but I am desirous of it on account of the needs of the Navy. The admiral in charge of the Bureau of Navigation tells us that he needs it. It is there. It is in a mild climate, where we can train our boys and seamen during the entire winter, which can not be done at any of the other stations unless we go to the Pacific. I have been over to the House to-day and conferred with a good many leading men over there, and I have a very strong belief that if the matter goes back there and the question is understood—I am sure it was not understood day before yesterday; you know how much noise there is in that Chamber——

Mr. HALE. There was not more noise than there will be day after to-morrow.

Mr. TILLMAN. The House will not be in session day after to-morrow. That will be Sunday.

Mr. HALE. Both bodies will be in session. The Senator says it was not understood——

Mr. TILLMAN. I only judge it was not understood because of the impression made by the South Carolina men who discussed it and by those who opposed it, which was that we were anxious or were willing to get two or three naval establishments, which is not the case. We simply have two there, anyhow. One of them is being given over to the bats and owls when the Government needs it badly, and it only takes a pitiful $50,000 to put it in order for the use of seamen and the apprentices, and it seems to me a perfectly wise and legitimate expenditure of money. If the House says, "We do not want it, and will not have it," I will sit down and say nothing.

Mr. HALE. My point is that on debate, when the Members of the House from South Carolina, who are interested in this matter just as much as is the Senator from South Carolina, debated it fully, without any restriction, and presented the case as strongly as they could, the House voted it down by a majority of about 2 to 1. I do not think the Senator will gain anything by further insisting on the amendment. I think it is one of the cases of the inevitable.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will not the Senator let us try? It will not hurt the bill at all. It will go through to-morrow anyway. The Senator from Maine knows that the work which will be done by this money will give the country as much use and benefit as any other dollar that we appropriate in the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. It is utterly impossible to make the Senator see any side of the question except the one upon which he has set his mind. I think that the Senate has done all that it ought to do in this case. It has been debated in the House and rejected, and we ought to accept that result. But if the Senator, with his persistency, which never ceases, thinks that he ought to have another chance, let him take it. I can have no time to attend to any more conferences myself. It will have to be left to the other conferees.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think that the Senator from California and I will be able to come to some understanding or agreement, and this matter can be handled without the Senator from Maine, although, of course, we realize how valuable his aid is and how wise he has been in all these matters, and we depend on his own pertinacity sometimes. I have seen the Senator very determined, and on conference reports insist and insist and insist, and finally carry his point.

Mr. HALE. Not for anything in my State, that I ever knew. I do not have anything in my State.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish it were out of my State.

Mr. HALE. I certainly wish it were.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would be working for it harder than I am. But as it is not, I can not help it.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. As one of the conferees, I simply desire to state—like the chairman, who has presented the case fairly—all the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate were in full sympathy with the Senator from South Carolina and with the recommendation of the Navy Department for this naval training station at Charleston or Port Royal, where, as the Senator has explained, the Government owns this property. The Senate acted upon the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it was embodied as amendment numbered 1 in the bill. The Senate unanimously adopted the amendment. When it went to the House the House disagreed to the Senate amendments, and we went into conference, and there were three or four different sessions of the conferees on the bill, the Senator from South Carolina being unavoidably absent. An agreement was reached upon all the amendments proposed by the Senate except this amendment numbered 1.

If there was any probability of the House receding from its position, I should be only too glad to join with other Senators in asking the Senate to insist upon this amendment, but I have done some missionary work while my friend has been in South Carolina. I have interviewed the members of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, and I have every assurance from them that they will not recede from the position they have already taken. Surely my friend from South Carolina has done everything is his power; he has done work himself with his colleagues in the House, and he has made statements here to-day which certainly make him solid with his constituents, although it is not possible for him to be more endeared to them than he already is by his long service here and his devotion to their interests.

If we were to have a longer session, if we had two weeks more or one week more, I would say we will make another effort. But the bill has to be engrossed and enrolled, and it carries a hundred million dollars. It is for the support of the Navy of the United States and all of its auxiliaries. It seems to me that my friend from South Carolina should therefore act upon the recommendation of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and let it pass this year, and consent to the Senate receding.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I do not like to appear mulish or obstinate, and I am not. But I recall that in this very controversy between the Senate and House conferees there was one amendment to which the House objected very strenuously and said they would not agree to it, but they did agree to it with a slight modification. The Senator from Maine said, "We will hold to that," and we got it.

Now, all I ask is that the Senate give its voice and let us go into conference again; and if the House insists, there is plenty of time. We have three more days—two and a half, anyhow—and if the House says we have got to let this amendment go out it will go out. There will be plenty of time to engross the bill and have it become a law, and the Navy will not be hurt.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that, in view of his own statement and the statement made by the chairman of the subcommittee and the Senator from California, I do not see how it would be possible to expect the House to recede. The Senator himself says he only wants to try it, and both the Senator from Maine and the Senator from California say there is no use in trying. If the Senate was real earnestly in favor of this proposition and we were going over there with a united front the House might possibly be ready to accept the Senator's views. But with the conditions which now confront us and as we have only one more legislative day as a matter of fact, it seems to me to be utterly useless to try to force the House into accepting this amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. If that is the attitude of those who are in control here, the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate and the men who direct and control affairs, I know what it means, I suppose I will have to surrender.

Mr. HALE. We will stand by the Senator another year.

Mr. TILLMAN. But the Senator has just been reelected. The people who are interested down there never did vote for the Senator. The Senator does not care three straws for their votes. He is caring for the money that is to be expended for the use of the Navy of the United States, and it is a legitimate and honest expenditure to give us a training station there, where boys and recruits can go in winter and be trained instead of being housed as they are where it is icebound. That is all there is in it.

Mr. HALE. Under the conditions, I move that the Senate recede from its amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAMES H. BERRY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. TAWNEY,
WALTER I. SMITH,
GEO. W. TAYLOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I am not able to inform myself from the mere reading of the report about the matter concerning which I desire to know the situation. I therefore ask the Senator from Iowa what this report does with the amendment about which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] wrote the members of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad?

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment is in disagreement. I shall be glad to answer any questions about the report which Senators may desire to ask.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House and ask a further conference with the House upon those amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BERRY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25474) to amend sections 5 and 6 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with Indian tribes, and to protect the same," to report it without amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM KLING.

Mr. SCOTT. From the Committee on Pensions I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11401) granting an increase of pension to William Kling, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William Kling, late of Company H, Two hundred and first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPORTATION OF IMPURE AND UNWHOLESOME TEA.

Mr. WARNER. I ask leave to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1548) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897, which is on the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance if the bill affects the revenue?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; it undoubtedly would affect the revenue.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to state that I called up the bill at the request of my colleague [Mr. STONE], who is detained from the Senate.

ORDINARY STAMPS FOR SPECIAL-DELIVERY LETTERS.

Mr. CARTER. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10095) making certain changes in the postal laws, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. KEAN. I think we ought to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. The bill is recommended by the Post-Office Department, and there has been no opposition to it.

Mr. CARTER. The purpose of the bill is made obvious by reading it. It is a common experience that a person desiring to send a letter by special delivery has difficulty in procuring the special-delivery stamp. It is necessary frequently to make a special purchase in order to have that stamp available. Under the bill by using five 2-cent stamps of the ordinary kind and marking the letter "Special" the revenue is obtained and the letter goes forward without the necessity of purchasing a special-delivery stamp.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OKLAHOMA SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. LONG. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24655) to authorize the legislature of Oklahoma to dispose of a certain section of school land.

Mr. KEAN. Is that the bill we had up the other day?

Mr. LONG. It was placed on the Calendar the other day.

Mr. KEAN. Was it objected to?

Mr. LONG. It was laid over.

Mr. KEAN. I think that as Oklahoma is soon to be admitted as a State we had better not dispose of the school land there.

Mr. LONG. It is to authorize the legislature of Oklahoma to make the disposition. It can not be done without the action of the legislature.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LONG. Do I understand that objection was made to the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from New Jersey to object.

Mr. KEAN. I object to the legislature of Oklahoma disposing of anything until the State of Oklahoma is formed.

CHARLES W. SPALDING.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from New Jersey withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I ask leave to call up a small military-record bill. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8585) for the relief of Charles W. Spalding.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 6, after the word "as," to strike out the article "a;" and in the same line, after the words "first lieutenant," to insert "of Company C;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Charles W. Spalding shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 25th day of April, 1864, as first lieutenant of Company C, Twentieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. S. HAMMAKER.

Mr. DICK. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13418) for the relief of W. S. Hammaker. It is a bill which has passed the House and is favorably reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Ohio if the report made by the Department was favorable or unfavorable?

Mr. DICK. The report certifies the account as being absolutely correct, but makes no recommendation. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have favorably reported the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not object to the bill myself, but the chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. FULTON], who is not in his seat, said that he would oppose every claims bill that did not go to his committee. I thought probably that the bill ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to W. S. Hammaker, late postmaster of the city of Findlay, Ohio, $2,251.28, to reimburse him for moneys actually expended and paid for necessary clerical assistance in carrying on the operation of the post-office at that city during his official term as postmaster, from 1885 to 1889, in excess of the amount allowed by the Post-Office Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5951) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. KEAN. I will consent to that, if the bill does not provoke any discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. KEAN. I am sorry to say to the Senator from Alabama that I am told that the bill for which he has asked consideration will provoke discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill had better be read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] have left at the desk a request that they should be notified when this bill was called up for consideration.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then the bill had better go over.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to hear the title of the bill again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5951) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to hear the bill itself read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia requests the reading of the bill. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not do that until the bill the consideration of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] has requested can be disposed of.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from New Jersey understood that there was objection to the present consideration of the Senator's bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not heard any objection. I merely heard a suggestion that two Senators would like to be present when the bill was considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] distinctly objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 2, 1907, at 11 o'clock a. m.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 25851, the general deficiency bill, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as a matter of expedition.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I make an inquiry of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. If that consent be granted, will we have the same opportunity of amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule as we would in the Committee of the Whole, or will it be in the power of the gentleman in charge of the bill to call the previous question at any time he sees fit?

The SPEAKER. The same points of order, the same methods of consideration as to amendment, if the consent be given, would run. Of course, one of the objects is to hasten its consideration. I apprehend the gentleman would have the bill read through for amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not want to retard the consideration of the bill. I am perfectly willing to hasten proper legislation to conclude the session of Congress, but there may be on the part of the House some desire to amend this bill, and the gentleman could cut off all that by calling the previous question in the House, which he could not do in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Would it be in order to move the previous question before the closing of the reading of the bill for amendments?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair supposes it would be in order to do that.

Mr. LITTAUER. I have no desire to cut off any debate that is necessary. We have but two working days left for the consideration of public business. The consideration of the general deficiency bill was finished yesterday in the committee, is now before the House, and it ought to be taken up and passed and sent over to the Senate, so that that body could give it consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. I object.

Mr. LITTAUER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope that you will not do that. I think if my colleague would give assurance that this bill being considered in the House would be read, and Members would be given an opportunity to offer amendments, the same as in committee, there would be no objection.

Mr. LITTAUER. I will give that assurance very plainly. The bill is to be read, and read just as if it were being read in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Read under the five-minute rule in the House?

Mr. LITTAUER. Read under the five-minute rule in the House.

Mr. PRINCE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRINCE. In case we should consent to take up this bill at the present, would it not delay or interfere with the discussion under the five-minute rule of the pending ship-subsidy bill?

The SPEAKER. Appropriation bills and privileged matters and conference reports are exempted under the order. The House might be inclined to hasten the matter, so that it could go into Committee of the Whole. But the gentleman calls the bill up, and there is an express exception made in the order as to appropriation bills and motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York to give me his attention. There is a provision in this bill which writes into the law a provision in reference to control by the House over its contingent fund. It was written in the law in the general deficiency bill last year, and it became necessary to pass a joint resolution repealing that law before the House could pass resolutions to pay money out of the contingent fund for its own convenience and for its own business. Now, that is again repeated in this bill, and I propose to make the point of order against it.

The SPEAKER. If it is legislation upon the bill, it would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. But, Mr. Speaker, it will not be subject to the point of order if before that provision is reached the gentleman should move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has given his assurances.

Mr. LITTAUER. I simply want to expedite public business by taking up this bill at this time, so that it may have fair, but rapid consideration. Read the bill through, so that points of order may be made in perfecting the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands the regular order. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the five-minute rule. Is a second demanded?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a second.

Mr. LITTAUER. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. LITTAUER. I reserve my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, unless some one on this side desires time, I do not care to occupy it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, ordering that the bill be read in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and consider it as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds had voted in favor of the motion.

Mr. SULZER. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 143, noes 48.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25851) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Supervising Architect: And the services of skilled draftsmen, civil engineers, computers, and such other services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order, may be employed only in the office of the Supervising Architect exclusively to carry into effect the various appropriations for the construction of public buildings, to be paid for from and equitably charged against such appropriations: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, shall not exceed $300,000; and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall each year in the annual estimates report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order as to that paragraph. So far as it is apparent from the paragraph, no skilled draftsman could be appointed in any office of the Treasury Department except in the office of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. LITTAUER. This is the same provision for the office of the Supervising Architect that has been carried for years, and all that it does is to extend the appropriation from $250,000 to $300,000.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is in error in saying that it is the usual provision.

Mr. LITTAUER. That is exactly right. If the gentleman will look at the legislative bill of the current year he will find it in the exact words in which it stands here, and exactly as in the bill for next year. The whole purpose is to increase the appropriation of $250,000 to $300,000, necessary for the buildings that are to be erected.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that the purpose is apparently to shut out the employment of draftsman in any other office except that of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. LITTAUER. They are the draftsmen that are now employed.

Mr. MANN. The evident purpose is that they shall be employed only in the office of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. LITTAUER. That is the intention—to keep these men in this office.

Mr. MANN. The reason I ask was this: We have just provided for the construction of some revenue cutters, which will require the services of skilled draftsmen in that branch of the service. If it won't cut these men out, I have no objection.

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, I will say to my friend from Illinois that public-building draftsmen are hardly qualified for the building of revenue cutters. The condition that used to exist in the office was that where there was not enough work these clerks and draftsmen would be detailed to the Auditor's office or to other bureaus, a practice we wanted to stop. This provision has been in the law now for at least two years.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the salary of the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York shall be at the rate of $8,000 per annum.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the paragraph on page 25, beginning with line 24 and ending with line 26.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. MACON. Yes.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield my time to my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the appraiser at the port of New York under existing statutes receives $6,000 per annum. The naval officer, the assistant treasurer, and the surveyor all receive $8,000 per annum. The collector receives $12,000 per annum. There is no single official under the Government whose office is more responsible, who deals with larger affairs, the efficiency of whose administration of the office is of such great consequence to the revenues of the Government as this appraiser at the port of New York; and it seemed as though in justice to the officer, in fairness to the position, for the good of the service, this official, rendering service of vastly greater consequence than his fellows—than the surveyor or the naval officer—ought at least to receive the compensation that these officers do. It requires a man of great ability, great executive ability; it requires a man of wide knowledge, it requires a man of executive experience—a very unusual man—to fill well the position of appraiser at the port of New York. The surprise is that it has been possible to obtain the type of men that the position requires at the salary heretofore fixed, and it does seem to me that it practically cripples the service not to give this man a fair compensation commensurate with the immense duties devolving upon him. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that in view of these facts, the gentleman from Arkansas will not insist upon his point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this kind of legislation as a general thing, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is usually so very fair and considerate that I am not disposed to make a point of order against the matter in which he is so specially interested. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Revenue-Cutter Service: To reimburse officers and enlisted men of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service who were on duty under orders at San Francisco during the earthquake and fire in that city on or about April 18, 1906, for losses of uniforms, equipment, and other personal effects sustained by them through said fire: Provided, That such reimbursement shall be made under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and upon vouchers approved by him, $5,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, the $5,000 which we submit for appropriation here is to reimburse officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service in the same way that the officers of the Navy and Treasury forces were repaid for the loss of personal property, uniforms and so on, which occurred at the earthquake and conflagration at San Francisco, where these officers were performing duty under orders. The exact statement of the losses of each individual has been made and approved. It exceeds, a little, $5,000.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think they ought to go before the proper Committee on Claims of the House, as the other claims did?

Mr. LITTAUER. No; these are public officials, public servants, ordered to the locality where a great earthquake and conflagration took place, and as this reimbursement has been made to others, why should it not be to the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. MANN. I have great regard for the Revenue-Cutter Service, I may say to the gentleman, but this is not proper legislation.

Mr. LITTAUER. Well, of course the gentleman can take exception to it, but we have provided for all other services, public servants performing public duty under orders, and why not treat the Revenue-Cutter Service with fair consideration?

Mr. MANN. Well, it is not claimed that these losses were incurred on board vessels or anything of that kind. Of course, I shall have to take the assurance of the gentleman that we have paid the others. I never heard of it.

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, we have, repeatedly.

Mr. LITTAUER. We paid the officers of the Marine Corps, the officers of the Navy, for losses at San Francisco.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If these claims go to the Committee on Claims, the claimants will be fortunate if they get their money in twenty-five years.

Mr. LITTAUER. The provision for the payment of the Army, I believe, went out on a point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that the officers of the Army ought to be paid inasmuch as the officers of the Marine Corps have been paid.

Mr. MANN. It is probably true that they ought to be paid something for the loss, but when you pay a man for the loss of rugs that he may have had in his house at the time because he was living in that place and the place was destroyed by fire, it seems to me that that is going a long way.

Mr. TAWNEY. The property which these men lost they lost in consequence of the fact that they were protecting the property of the Government and the property of other people. They were obliged to neglect their own property in order to save the property of others. This has been done with respect to naval officers and the Army officers, and the Revenue-Cutter Service is the only branch of the service not provided for. The amount involved here is $5,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Treasury finds necessary.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman propose to do the same thing with reference to the officers of the Treasury and the officers of the subtreasury and the post-office and other branches of the public service in San Francisco?

Mr. TAWNEY. There has been no suggestion made to our committee that the officers of any other branch of the service sustained any loss.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman knows that they did.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will.

Mr. PERKINS. Were any of these men insured? Is not the result of the Government paying such losses practically to make the Government an insurance company, and will it not lead officers to neglect the protection they otherwise would take?

Mr. LITTAUER. This is for loss of personal effects, small amounts—like a uniform or two.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman, in reference to the Army matters, that upon some investigation I found this to be the fact: That officers who had insurance on their goods, who had collected that insurance, presented claims against the Government for loss of the same goods upon which they had collected insurance, and proposed to be paid twice for the same goods.

Mr. LITTAUER. That may be true, and yet this whole sum is only $5,000.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he did not make the point of order on the Army and Navy provision?

Mr. MANN. I made it on the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completion of ocean-going tug for the North Pacific coast, in addition to the authorized limit of cost, $30,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, after line 12, insert a new item, as follows:

"Light-House Establishment: For a light and fog-signal station at the entrance of Huntington Harbor and Lloyd Harbor, New York, $40,000."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on that and ask the gentleman to explain whether or not that is authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. That is authorized, and is the only item authorized that is not carried by the sundry civil bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. Is there any reason why it was not so carried?

Mr. MANN. I am informed by the gentleman in charge of the bill in the Senate that it was omitted by accident.

Mr. LITTAUER. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, post-office and court-house: The provision of the act approved June 30, 1906, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, which provides that all expenses incident to the occupancy of the building in question shall be paid from the sum of $10,000 then appropriated for rent of temporary quarters at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is hereby repealed.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11 strike out all of lines 8 to 25, inclusive.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this amendment, I would state that this item has already been taken care of in the sundry civil bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Richmond, Va., post-office, court-house, and custom-house: In lieu of the authority to enter into contracts for reconstructing and enlarging this building, contained in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1908, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for reconstructing and enlarging the said building at a total cost not to exceed $500,000, in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated and appropriated in said sundry civil act, but exclusive of the cost of site.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make or reserve the point of order?

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to move to strike it out.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12 strike out all from lines 1 to 10, inclusive.

Mr. LITTAUER. These two items have been taken care of in the sundry civil bill by Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. The reason I reserved the point of order was you refer in this to the sundry civil act of 1908.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES.

The Auditor for the State and other Departments is authorized to examine all claims which have been or may be presented in proper form by the different counties in Arizona Territory, and to ascertain the amount due each of said counties on account of legal costs and expenses incurred from March 3, 1889, in the prosecution of Indians under the act of March 2, 1885 (23 Stat., p. 385), for which the United States is liable under act of March 3, 1889 (Stat. L., vol. 25, p. 1004), and which have been paid by said counties; and the amounts so found shall be certified by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress for consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the last paragraph. I think we ought to know what this is.

Mr. LITTAUER. This is to enable under a statute passed in 1885 to determine in proper form claims of different counties in Arizona.

Mr. MANN. Is the locality fixed under the statute?

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, yes; all provisions of that kind are made under the statute, and it is simply carrying out the existing law.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Assessor's office: To enable the assessor to prepare a complete set of water-main assessment cards, general arrears cards, and book of arrears, in conformity with the system of assessment and taxation completed November 1, 1906, under the act of February 23, 1905, the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from the revenues of the water department exclusively: Provided, That employees of the assessor's office may be allowed to do this work outside of office hours and to receive therefor reasonable additional compensation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order against that provision.

Mr. LITTAUER. What is the objection of the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is legislation; that is the technical objection.

Mr. LITTAUER. Well, we have had this same provision in other offices—the collector's office. It is necessary, under the act of February 23, to reorganize the assessor's office in order to make a general card index in connection with the matters in that office. It was thought that the clerks in that office by working at night, over hours, could, during the rest of the year, and at an expense not to exceed a total amount of $2,000, do this work much more expeditiously, and surely with much greater economy, than by the employment of outside or extra clerical force. We have had this same provision for this compensation for work done outside of office hours in the collector's office. It is a small item of $2,000, and this work must go on after office hours, because the books are in requisition during office hours.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why was no estimate made for this at the time we considered the proper bill?

Mr. LITTAUER. That is something I could not answer, but I know it came as an item of deficiency and seemed a reasonable matter to carry out the law and to include in the deficiency bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, that is not to carry out the law. That is something in addition to what the law requires. My opinion is that where the employees of an office are permitted to do additional work after hours and are paid for it that the greater part of the work is done during the ordinary office hours. I am opposed to the provision under the circumstances, and insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seventh. That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia the amount of $22 paid M. C. Brown, teacher in the public schools of said District, for salary for the month of September, 1906.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, after line 10, insert:

"Eighth. That all teachers in the service or employ of the public school system of the District of Columbia on or before date of the passage or approval of public act No. 254, entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia,' are continued in office, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay them such salaries as they would have been entitled to had they not been removed, demoted, dismissed, and in other ways discontinued from their positions in the service of the public schools."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment, unless the gentleman wishes me to reserve it. I make the point that it is new legislation.

Mr. GREENE. If it goes out on the point of order, it goes out, and I am not protesting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Militia: For equipment, machinery, and repairs for practice ships, $1,500.

For apparatus for instruction in seamanship and signaling, $250.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20 strike out all of lines 15 to 18, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Pending the present intervention by the United States Government under the Platt amendment to the treaty between the United States and Cuba to maintain a government of law and order in that island the President is hereby authorized to receive from the treasury of the Cuban Republic and pay into the Treasury of the United States from time to time such amounts to reimburse the United States for the expenditures from the United States Treasury made necessary on account of such intervention as he may consider the Cuban treasury then able to pay without serious embarrassment.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 26 strike out all of lines 2 to 11, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The President is hereby authorized to receive from the treasury of the Cuban Republic and pay into the Treasury of the United States from time to time such amounts to reimburse the United States for the expenditures from the United States Treasury made necessary on account of the present intervention as he may consider the Cuban treasury then able to pay without serious embarrassment."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of this amendment I desire to call the attention of the House to a general matter in connection with this bill. The bill carries $9,847,000 of appropriations under the submission of estimates of about two million additional. Of the $9,847,000, $4,550,000 are carried for the military establishment—almost one-half of the amount appropriated. And the necessity for the large amount submitted here is because of the participation of our Army in the pacification of Cuba and necessary for the maintenance of law and order, under treaty, in that island.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON]?

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does that amendment make a liability on Cuba of the entire amount, or a part of it?

Mr. LITTAUER. This amendment does not make a liability on Cuba. It seeks to enforce as large a payment as the President may believe the Cuban Government is able to pay, and authorizes the acceptance of the money into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is entirely in his hands?

Mr. LITTAUER. Largely so, and in his hands under the qualification not to incur serious embarrassment there. The treasury of Cuba to-day has an ample balance, and a balance to permit a considerable payment under this law as soon as it may be enacted, so that the money may be accepted therefrom. But there are certain items which the present provisional government desires to carry out in strengthening the rural guard in the island, so as to make another pacification unnecessary, or at least do as much as they can in that direction.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to offer at this place.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 11, page 26, the following:

"For expenses incident to stay of United States troops at the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition and of visiting foreign military organizations in attendance upon such exposition at the invitation of the United States Government, including preparation and sanitation of a camp site for such troops, $75,000: Provided, That the police, discipline, sanitation, and exercises connected with visiting military organizations of foreign governments and of the National Guard shall be under supervision and control of the Regular Army, and for this purpose the President is authorized to accept from the State of Virginia the necessary temporary cession of Federal jurisdiction over the camp sites of all such troops and organizations."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. LITTAUER. I make the point of order and reserve it until the gentleman makes an explanation.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the point of order is well taken unless, possibly, it is good against the latter clause. I wish to have the Speaker understand that in the legislation relating to the Jamestown Exposition we have hitherto authorized the President and the War Department to make an exhibit of the military, United States and foreign, at the exposition.

We have gone so far as to have invited England, France, Germany, and perhaps some other countries to send troops to this country to attend the Jamestown Exposition, to be on exhibition with the United States troops. Every step has been taken. These countries have been invited to send their selected troops for this purpose. They have accepted, and unless this provision is put in the bill, or something equivalent to it—and it is in pursuance of previous authority given to the War Department—there will be no provision for camping and taking care of them. This provision is drawn by the Secretary of War, he stating that there is no other money appropriated to be used to prepare the camp at all, either for the purpose of taking care of the United States troops already agreed to be sent there or of the troops from other countries that are now being prepared to be sent to the exposition in pursuance of the law that we have heretofore passed authorizing this very thing to be done. It is for that reason that I insist that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to hear anything on the point of order. This amendment provides:

That the police, discipline, sanitation, and exercises connected with visiting military organizations of foreign governments and of the National Guard shall be under the supervision and control of the Regular Army; and for this purpose the President is authorized to accept from the State of Virginia the necessary temporary cession of Federal jurisdiction over the camp sites of all such troops and organizations.

Clearly that is legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the amendment that I ask the Clerk to read, omitting from the amendment just offered all after and including the word "provided."

Mr. LITTAUER. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KEIFER. I insist that this is in precise accordance with the law. We have authorized an exhibit of the military by law, and we have gone so far, Mr. Speaker, as to incur a high moral obligation with other countries that we would take care of their military sent to the Jamestown Exposition. We have brought about all these things and have done them in exact pursuance of law; and it is a part of our duty to appropriate the money to provide a site for their proper encampment, as the amendment provides.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is causing the act to be examined. Does it contain a limitation of cost for expenses of participation by the Army?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not know if the limitation is to the extent of participation, but the appropriation for carrying out the purposes of the exhibition was limited to $200,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the amount of the appropriation.

The SPEAKER. This particular work of sanitation is not authorized by law.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, although this particular thing was not herein provided for in the appropriation, it has been authorized by law.

Mr. LITTAUER. I believe that the law will show that there is a limitation.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to say that the Secretary of War has said that he has all authority to do this except that he has not money to enable him to carry out the provisions of the law. He was here yesterday, and he takes a great interest in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from New York and to the House that this item may be passed without prejudice until the matter can be examined.

Mr. LITTAUER. I ask unanimous consent to pass this item without prejudice, so that the point of order can be looked into by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, after line 13, insert:
"For current expenses at the several Branches, to be disbursed in the discretion of the Board of Managers, during the remainder of the fiscal year 1907, for such objects of amusement as have heretofore been supported, in whole or in part, out of the post funds of the several Branches, $25,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state whether the amendment extends to the fiscal year 1907 or 1908?

Mr. LITTAUER. It extends to the 30th of June next, when the provisions of the present sundry civil bill will take up the purpose for which the amendment is offered.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to get some information.

Mr. LITTAUER. On the 3d of March the canteens will cease. Out of the profits coming from the sales made in the canteens there was a fund out of which the amusements at the Homes are paid for. That included the bands engaged at the Homes. In the consideration of the sundry civil bill of this year provision was made by adding to the current expenses of each Home a stated amount of money, which in all amounted to $79,800. We have the four months provided for here, and thereby provide for the time that is to be covered between the operation of the two bills.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The effect of the legislation which we had the other day, when we transferred the liquor traffic from the inside to the outside of the Soldiers' Homes, has necessitated an appropriation from the Treasury.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse R. Lowen, C. Morgan, and E. Bailey for loss of time and doctor's fees on account of injuries received while employed in the construction of the office building for the House of Representatives, $250 each; in all, $750.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on lines 15 to 19.

Mr. LITTAUER. That is the item for the payment of the three men injured in the construction of the House office building.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will not the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Of course, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. LITTAUER. It has been the custom to pay in just such cases. We made an allowance for those who were injured in the construction of the same building last year.

Mr. MANN. We ought not to do it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I should like to have the gentleman explain this item to me, so as to avoid any point of order I might raise. I have not read the item.

Mr. LITTAUER. Three men were injured in the construction of the new office building for the House of Representatives, and this is to pay their doctors' fees and for their lost time, and probably some little gratuity as well.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is the amount carried in the bill?

Mr. LITTAUER. Two hundred and fifty dollars for each man injured.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is to prevent the injured parties suing the contractors?

Mr. LITTAUER. They are not under the contractors. They are employed by the Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Direct?

Mr. LITTAUER. Direct.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No intervening contractor whatever?

Mr. LITTAUER. If it were a question between a contractor and his employees, the contractor would have insurance covering his liability. If it were against a private individual, they could sue him.

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like the gentleman's permission to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not making any point upon this, but merely ask the gentleman a question. I want to know about it, because I think there ought to be some law by which the Government could be held liable for injuries inflicted by its negligence, as other employees and masters are liable. As it is now, only those who can get their claims upon appropriation bills can receive any compensation for injuries sustained while in the employ of the Government. Under the law you can not bring a suit in the Court of Claims, and can not compensate people for injuries except by act of Congress. I merely want to call attention to the peculiar fact that the Government is the only employer or master that can injure its servants by the negligence of its servants or superintendents against whom no suit can be brought. There ought to be some remedy for the thousands of employees in the service of the Government by which they could receive compensation for injuries inflicted through the negligence of the Government itself.

Mr. MANN. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the unexpended balance appropriated in the act approved June 30, 1906, for reroofing that portion of the terrace of the Capitol which is occupied by committee rooms, be reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1908 for the purpose of painting the Dome and central portion of the Capitol, for the restoration of Statuary Hall and adjacent corridors, and for the installation of revolving doors for entrances in the Capitol building not now provided for.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 42, line 24, strike out the word "year" and insert in lieu thereof the words "years 1907 and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay out of the sum allowed to the Eastern Cherokees under the judgment of the Supreme Court, October term, 1905, to those individuals and councilors entitled to the same under resolutions of April 29, 1904, and May 11, 1906, of the permanent council of the Eastern Cherokees and the order of said council of August 17, 1906, the sum of $4,405.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 2, page 44, insert the following:
"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay out of the sum allowed the city of Lawton, Okla., for public improvements by act of Congress dated March 3, 1901, the sum of $60,000 for the purpose of completion and putting in operation the waterworks for said city."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order against that; that it is new legislation and changes existing law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment as the only available means of immediately securing for the city of Lawton the completion and operation of their waterworks system. The following telegrams explain the necessity for this amendment, viz:

LAWTON, OKLA., February 23, 1907.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

City absolutely without water for domestic or fire protection. Health of inhabitants in danger, and also property interest. Department should act at once and supply $60,000 appropriated by Congress for our relief. A city of more than 10,000 inhabitants will be grateful to you for any action. Wire quick what you can do.

R. A. JONES, Mayor.

LAWTON, OKLA., February 23, 1907.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

City of Lawton without water for domestic use. Interior Department neglects to use money appropriated by last Congress for our relief. Health of entire city in danger. Help us get relief.

J. L. HAMON.

Mr. Speaker, the act of Congress of March 3, 1901, provided for the sale of the town sites of Lawton, Anadarko, and Hobart. The lots in these towns netted more than $700,000, which sum was prorated among the three towns. Six years have elapsed, and the Secretary has not yet paid these towns the money due them, but is still withholding a considerable amount of it from the city of Lawton.

The United States statutes required the Secretary of the Interior to place this money—as all other moneys are placed—in the United States Treasury to the credit of the towns to which it belonged. Section 234 of the Revised Statutes required this money to be paid into the Treasury of the United States and settled and adjusted therein. The present Secretary ignored this law, and on March 2, 1904, R. B. Armstrong, Acting Treasurer of the United States, wrote me that "No proceeds of the sales (of these town lots) have ever been covered into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. Speaker, the above telegrams show that the law-defying and justice-denying Secretary of the Interior is still withholding these funds from the city of Lawton, and it seems that nothing but a direct demand of Congress, such as I have proposed by this amendment, can compel the present Secretary of the Interior to pay over to this city the money the law gives her, and that is now unlawfully, unjustly, and, I believe, maliciously withheld from her. But, Mr. Speaker, if the point of order made against my amendment is sustained, still the President of the United States and the citizens of Lawton, and, indeed, the entire West, are to be congratulated in having selected a capable, honest, and efficient man to fill the high office of Secretary of the Interior, instead of the suspicious, superannuated misfit that has so long disgraced this Cabinet position. And, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the new Secretary will do speedy justice to the town of Lawton by using their money in building their waterworks.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses, Territory of Alaska: For furniture, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses for the offices of the marshals and attorneys in the district of Alaska, $1,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I may want to offer an amendment. In lines 14 and 15, page 46, it seems to me that the word "district" should appear between the words "and attorneys;" so as to make it read "marshals and district attorneys." I want to call the matter to the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill. The bill reads, "and other incidental expenses for the officers of the marshals and attorneys in the district of Alaska." The gentleman doesn't want to fix up the offices for all the lawyers in Alaska, but for the "district" attorneys.

Mr. LITTAUER. The appropriation for many years has read in the same language as is contained here, and I think that it must have served its purpose. This is the submission as made by the Department.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman catches my point, does he not? The language is "marshals and attorneys in the district of Alaska." Should it not read "marshals and district attorneys?"

Mr. LITTAUER. We followed the law as it has been enacted and reenacted and as recommended by the Department. I do not believe that I am in a position to correct it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Court of Claims is hereby authorized to appoint Lucien B. Howry as an auditor to said court or any judge thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order in order to inquire what is the object of this provision authorizing the appointment of an auditor for a judge of the Court of Claims?

Mr. LITTAUER. It is a personal matter. I will try to explain. Judge Howry, a member of the Court of Claims, is entitled to an auditor according to law, as are all the judges of the Court of Claims. That auditor practically acts as a private secretary. The general law applying to all United States judges prohibits the employment of a near relative. The general law was enacted for the purpose of preventing the United States judges from appointing their relatives as receivers and marshals or in a capacity where they would be enabled to draw large fees. It was found here that, in view of the illness of Judge Howry, the employment of his son, the employment having been made by the judges in the absence of Judge Howry, was desirable; that none of the objections to the employment of a relative would apply in connection with the Court of Claims, and that it was well to exempt this man. It is subject to a point of order, if the gentleman wishes to make it.

Mr. MANN. I think the general law is a good one.

Mr. LITTAUER. The law is a good one, and prevents a judge of the United States courts from choosing one of his relatives and appointing him in a capacity where the emolument would be considerable. But in a place like this, where the salary is only $1,200, the objections do not apply, and we felt that we could make the exception.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York: Provided, That all persons employed under section 715 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the courts: Provided further, That no such person shall be employed during vacation; of reasonable expenses actually incurred for travel and attendance of district judges directed to hold court outside of their districts, not to exceed $10 per day each, to be paid on written certificates of the judges, and such payments shall be allowed the marshal in the settlement of his accounts with the United States; of reasonable expenses actually incurred for travel and attendance of justices or judges who shall attend the circuit court of appeals held at any other place than where they reside, not to exceed $10 per day, the same to be paid upon written certificates of said judge, and such payments shall be allowed the marshal in the settlement of his account with the United States; of meals and lodgings for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court; and of compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $10,000.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 20, page 47, amend by striking out the words "directed to hold court outside of their district" and insert in lieu thereof the words "hold court at places other than those in which they reside."

Mr. LITTAUER. I make a point of order against that. We are taking care of deficiencies, and the language as reported here is the same as in the current law and the same as in the law enacted last year, so that the purpose of the gentleman is to enact new legislation.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not think there is any law——

Mr. LITTAUER. It would only apply for a fraction of the year.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is true, but it is just as important, as far as it goes.

Mr. LITTAUER. It would only be in force for four months, and then we should return to the old status.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; it would go for four months. As this law now stands, it permits the judge to be paid his expenses only when directed to hold court outside of his district. Now, there are several districts—a good many districts—each of which comprises only a single city or county. The judge does not have to go away from home. That is true of two of the districts in my own State; but in the middle district there are thirty-two counties, and the judge holds court in three different cities, and that is the case in a great many districts.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I would appeal to the gentleman—he does not want to do this for four months and then lapse back again to the law as it now stands.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not want to lapse back, though I may have to. I want to do justice for four months anyway.

Mr. LITTAUER. Why just inject in the ordinary practice a change for four months? Congress will not meet again, and no legislation would be possible, at least until next December.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am going to try next December to get it made permanent, if possible. I wish to begin right now and accomplish all that is possible in this bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. But from July to December the old method would prevail.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We have recently provided a large number of additional places in different districts where judges may hold court. Does the gentleman propose that all these places where we provide judges shall hold court in each case they shall be paid $10 a day additional to their salary when they go away?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; it provides that they shall have their actual expenses, not to exceed $10 a day.

Mr. MANN. That means $10 a day.

Mr. OLMSTED. It means that otherwise a judge residing and holding court in Chicago, which is itself a judicial district, would have no expenses; but a judge in another district and having to hold at several has expenses, and it is just as much a matter of justice to pay him those expenses incurred within his own district as it is in cases where he goes over the line and holds court outside of his district. The present provision works also injustice between those judges who do not have to incur any traveling expenses and those whose duties require them to do so.

Mr. MANN. It means that a judge holding court in Chicago who goes to Peoria to hold court, as he does, will be paid extra for the time he is holding court there. I suggest to the gentleman that we provided at this session of Congress, in this Congress, more additional places where United States courts shall be held. The statement has been made in each one of those cases that it would cost nothing extra for the Government. Now, the gentleman proposes to pay each one $10 a day extra, in addition to their compensation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, I propose that each one holding court away from his home shall have his actual expenses paid.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask if this provision is existing law?

Mr. LITTAUER. It is existing law.

Mr. MANN. For this year.

Mr. LITTAUER. The law is made in the current appropriation act each year.

Mr. OLMSTED. I was going to suggest that the whole paragraph is out of order, for that matter. The first proviso is legislation.

Mr. MANN. It is a copy of the existing provision in the sundry civil act.

Mr. LITTAUER. For the current year, and legislation for the next year.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to be informed, as a matter of fact, is the proviso beginning on line 17 outside of the act appropriating for the expenses of the fiscal year?

Mr. MANN. It is not.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is verbatim the language of the current law.

The SPEAKER. But it does not "dwell in permanent law," as we call it?

Mr. LITTAUER. It does not dwell in permanent law. It is an appropriation act.

Mr. OLMSTED. Further than that, the first proviso is legislation also, which would have made the whole paragraph out of order if the point had been made. No point having been made against this paragraph, it is in order to perfect it by any germane amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask, Is the first proviso as it appeared heretofore in the law?

Mr. LITTAUER. Exactly as it stands here.

The SPEAKER. It reads that all persons employed under section 715 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the court, etc.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is new legislation.

The SPEAKER. Has that been enacted heretofore?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; in the present law, in the law for this year.

The SPEAKER. Then it is not legislation.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is not legislation. Moreover, we provide here for a deficiency.

The SPEAKER. Now, then, the next proviso—does the next proviso repeat that which has been in the bill heretofore?

Mr. LITTAUER. Word for word just as it is in the law to-day.

The SPEAKER. These two provisos, the Chair is informed, having dwelt in the law in a prior enactment, amount to legislation, and therefore the provision of the gentleman proposes to change existing law, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to the W. C. Walsh Company in connection with the performance of screen-wagon service in the city of Chicago, Ill., being service to and from Kinzie Station from October 2, 1905, to January 7, 1906, and for extraordinary service in the receipt and delivery of mails at the general post-office from October 30, 1905, to September 16, 1906, $11,364.92.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order to the last section.

The SPEAKER. Upon what section?

Mr. PERKINS. The section on page 52, beginning on line 11 and extending to line 20, on the ground that it is an appropriation for an object not authorized by law.

Mr. LITTAUER. What is the point of order?

Mr. PERKINS. That this is an appropriation, as I understand, for an object not authorized by law.

Mr. LITTAUER. But the Department tells us in their statement it is a deficiency.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say the pressure upon the desk of the Chair is such, with the order pressing for a vote at 3 o'clock on the merchant-marine bill, that the Chair under the order and under the discretion vested in the Chair feels he is impelled to declare the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the general order, and there is only one embarrassment about it. A few minutes ago the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] came to the Chair and wanted to know if the pending bill would be completed, say, in half an hour, and the Chair, guessing about it, said the Chair supposed it would. I say this hoping that somebody will find the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a conference report, I think, is in order.

The SPEAKER. Well, this is in order and that is in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it the intention of the Chair to turn the House into Committee of the Whole now for the purpose of discussing the ship-subsidy bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the gentleman from New Hampshire will take the chair.

SUBSIDY BILL.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 529, Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last night there was an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Michigan, striking out paragraphs 5 and 6 of section 1, and upon the demand of the gentleman from Iowa the proposition was divided, and the pending question is, Shall paragraph 5 be stricken from the bill?

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I am impressed with the utter absence of valid argument against that portion of the bill which establishes the lines to run to South America. After the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, which admits of bidding by everybody for the mail-carrying contracts, no question can be raised that there is any intention or any opportunity to favor anybody. I understand the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa to be, for instance, in advertising for bids to carry the mails to Brazil, that men should bid on speed, and the syndicate of men or the corporation which would give the highest speed for the sum of $600,000 a year would be awarded the contract. Now, that being the case,

Mr. Chairman, if there is any excess of compensation over what would be needed to carry our mail at the speed of 16 knots an hour we would likely get a speed of 17 or even 18 knots. It seems to me this reduces the question purely to a mail proposition and that it is a mere epithet to speak of the compensation as a subsidy. The academic speeches which have been made about subsidy are very interesting, and I agree with them on general principles, but they do not deal at all with the question involved in establishing these South American lines. It is a power prescribed by the Constitution to establish mail routes. That is a governmental power, and if it is "subsidy" to carry our mails to South America in the first instance at more than the Government receives for postage, then why was it not "subsidy" when the Government established and maintained hundreds of routes in advance of civilization, for the development of the country, until the time came when the postage received from the routes would pay for their maintenance? If this is "subsidy" then it is gross "subsidy" to maintain the rural free delivery, which absorbs all the postage received from the routes and at least $10,000,000 more each year. So I assert that the objection of subsidy can not be raised to this proposition. The question simply is: Is it in accord with a sound public policy to establish these South American routes—and that is the particular part of the bill to which I am now speaking—and is the compensation reasonable?

We are not so insular and contracted, Mr. Chairman, that we will establish liberal mail facilities where the letter starts in the United States and its destination is in the United States, and yet will deny our people the same liberal treatment when they desire to trade or to communicate with the people of other lands. The international mail system rests upon the same high public ground as the domestic mail system, with this in addition, that the former is in the interest of peace, that it will tend to bind the people of the different nations together and create a community of interest which is a powerful influence against war; and in that view it subserves a high purpose which is not especially subserved by the service in the United States.

There may be some incidental benefit connected with establishing these mail routes, but I do not think gentlemen should shudder and be greatly alarmed lest as a result of this policy a few ships should be built in American shipyards. The total cost of all the fleets established by this bill will probably not exceed two battle ships. This is not a very munificent provision for the shipbuilding industry. From the standpoint of peace, these couriers of peace traversing the ocean will be a more powerful agency against war than the two battle ships would be.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we come to the question of the necessity of the lines to South America. I have here a letter from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General in a reply to a request of mine as to our present postal facilities to the eastern coast of that continent, and I would call the attention of the committee to what I shall read in connection with the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] yesterday, when he read an imposing array of sailings of mails—nine during the month of March—by tramp steamship lines. Mr. Shallenberger says in his letter that during last month (January) mails for Brazil and the Argentine Republic were dispatched from New York fifteen times and during the current month fourteen times, the sailings of the conveying steamers being at irregular intervals, the dates being frequently changed, as the demands of the commercial traffic required—and without control by that Department—the average approximate time occupied in the voyage from New York to Rio de Janeiro being about twenty-five days and to Buenos Ayres about twenty-eight days.

In addition to these dispatches direct from New York, articles marked on the cover "via Europe" are sent to Great Britain to be forwarded thence, the approximate time by that route, if close connection is made with the British steamer, being to Rio de Janeiro about twenty-five days and to Buenos Ayres thirty days. If close connection is not made, the transit time would be from five to eight days longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, it may be that gentlemen are satisfied that our country, ostentatiously proclaiming itself the guardian of the other nations of this hemisphere, should be content that its mails to those southern nations should be transported by random tramp steamers, occupying on the average twenty-five days to reach Rio Janeiro, when a modern steamship such as is provided by this bill will carry them in nine days. For my part I do not think we have a sufficient service. It is utterly unfitting and inadequate. The predominant position of this nation in the Western Hemisphere and the interest of our people demand that we should have a far better service. The tramps are not passenger ships. In order to reach New York a Brazilian merchant must go to Europe and come back across the Atlantic. How can we expect thus to build up a trade? I shall therefore support most heartily the provisions of this bill which establish the South American lines.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] has been taunted upon the floor with having been a member of this committee but a single day and having secured the reporting of this bill. The great Committee on the Merchant Marine had been incubating upon this subject for several Congresses without visible results, and if the gentleman from New York in one day's service on that committee has caused it to bring forward a bill like this, he is to be commended. [Applause.] And if this bill shall become a law and shall encircle those South American countries with the swift mail lines running from the Atlantic ports, from the Gulf, and from the Pacific, then I think I am not extravagant when I say that if the gentleman from New York had accomplished nothing else than this during his membership here he would have rendered a splendid service to his country. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCALL. I have but a moment, but I will yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. I wanted to know whether the gentleman knew of any data by which it could be determined whether the amount provided for these South American lines was the proper amount for the service to be rendered?

Mr. McCALL. I think the gentleman did not hear what I said upon that point. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] the Postmaster-General will call for bids from anybody in the United States, not alone from the wicked men in Wall street, but from men in the gentleman's district and elsewhere, so that everybody can bid for carrying the mails upon a given route for the sum prescribed in this bill, the competition being upon speed, and the syndicate or corporation that will give the greatest speed for the sum allowed will get the contract. I can not see anything more fair than that. There is likely to be no waste of money, unless the gentleman is afraid that the mails will be carried too fast. That is the only thing to fear, it seems to me, from that system.

Mr. Chairman, the notable visit of Secretary Root has had an educating effect upon the people of this country. It has shown that we may successfully cultivate the people of South America and make them our real friends. We do not want to rule them by the "big stick," but their interests and our own will be subserved by the influence of the peaceable ties of trade. I believe that the provisions of this bill will be a long step in the direction of cementing their friendship for us.

Now, in respect to the Pacific lines established by the bill, it seems to me that that portion of the measure has not been so carefully considered as the portion relating to South America. I do not believe in discriminating between ships. I do not believe in discriminating between citizens of this country; and when men have invested their money in building steamship lines without any promise of assistance from the Government and have taken the risk of loss, I do not think it is right—I believe it is class legislation of the worst kind—that they should be discriminated against by a law. If Mr. Hill should happen to have an American-built ship fast enough to carry the mails across the Pacific, he should have the right to bid to use it the same as any other citizen. I do not believe that he is such a criminal, that he has done such harm to the people of this country in building up that great empire in the Northwest, that we should level against him here a law that would bar him from offering to render a service which he might render perhaps cheaper than any other person.

I think there are serious objections against at least one of the trans-Pacific lines which time will not permit me to discuss.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to this amendment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PRINCE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRINCE. My understanding is there has been one gentleman heard against the amendment. I desire to make a few remarks in favor of the amendment. It seems to me that it would be proper to alternate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know which side any gentleman may take.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the gentleman from New York aunounced that he desired to address the Chair in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. PRINCE. I desire to speak in favor of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much time is there for debate on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment has long been exhausted and is now proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall not object in this instance, but I shall hereafter demand the regular order as to all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Kentucky that under the regular order there is ten minutes for debate on an amendment.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, this bill has seven special provisions in it. The first and second have reference to the Atlantic coast and Brazil and the Atlantic coast and Argentina. Who will receive the benefit of this provision if it passes? I am credibly informed that it goes to one concern alone, known as the "Morse Ship Trust," capitalized at $100,000,000 and incorporated under the laws of Maine. This shipping trust has practically already purchased all the steamboat lines that start out from the Atlantic coast; and if this particular provision becomes law, we are passing over to the hands of this gigantic and stupendous monopoly millions of the people's money. Take No. 3. The hand out all goes into the hands of another shipping trust known as the "United Fruit Line." Reaching No. 4, we give the hand out to the Harriman line and his interests; reaching No. 5, we hand more to Mr. Harriman's interest; reaching No. 6, we give a hand out to Mr. Hill and his interest; reaching No. 7, we give a hand out to Claus Spreckels's interest. How much? Three million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually.

It is an irrevocable contract for ten years, which will mean $37,500,000 of the people's money handed over to these trusts and combinations as "a hand out." Here we are in this Republic seeking to regulate under sane regulations the transportation upon land of freight and passengers. But the moment these gentlemen who are interested in transportation companies reach the seaboard, the moment the transportation facilities which they own upon the sea are reached, we say to them we will let you alone. On the continent we are telling the people that we are in favor of regulating traffic and protecting them on the land. We play the cuttlefish when these transportation companies reach the seaboard. We say we will regulate these big transportation companies on the land, but when they start on the high seas we say to them: "Here is $37,500,000 for you; keep still and pay no attention to what we are doing to you on land, where the people are; we will make up what we take from you on land by giving you a hand out of $37,500,000." Now, that is exactly what Congress is asked to do. I am frank to say to the House that I do not believe it is an opportune time now to pass this legislation. Now, let us analyze the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee; and I desire to do so respectfully. Here are twelve Republican Members. Four go out of Congress in the closing days, and there are eight remaining. Four of the eight remaining are against this measure; four of the remaining Members are for this provision. Four go out now. Four remaining for the bill, four remaining against the amendment. And as my colleague from Illinois on the committee said, not a syllable of evidence, not a scintilla of evidence before the committee which sustains this bill that we are now discussing. Long since I learned from a distinguished jurist of my State, "If you are in doubt about a proposition how to vote, vote no, because you do not put anything into operation." I think we ought to go back to our people and find out what they want on this proposition. I think in these closing days of Congress (for this Congress will soon end) we ought to go back to them and find out what they want with reference to this hand out, as I call it; not a ship subsidy. If it was a ship subsidy, I should be talking along a different line; but this is not a ship subsidy. No man dare stand before the American people in Congress or out and call this a ship subsidy.

It is called a mail subsidy, a hand out, if you please, to great corporations and trusts of the sum of $37,500,000 for carrying mail, a part of which they have already agreed to carry under existing contracts, and to give them additional money for the doing of that which they have promised to do. I think the wise and proper thing for us, in these closing days, my countrymen, is to vote against this proposition. We on this side are responsible for legislation. We will be held responsible by the people for the passage or the nonpassage of this act. Our friends on the other side are not in a majority, they are not responsible for this legislation, but we upon this side of the House are; and I say to you, as the debate has thus far disclosed it, there is no evidence before the committee that this bill can be based upon, and a bill should be the result of evidence heard in a committee. Why take up a measure in the closing days of this Congress, a measure that was put through this committee, brought into this House, and as every man knows from reading in the public press, as the committee here knows from the discussions that have been had on the floor, its slimy, tortuous course has been one of darkness—why take up such a measure in the closing hours of the session and put it through this House? [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN and others rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], because last night when the committee rose the gentleman was on his feet and had secured recognition.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from California yield to me for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact, known to the public of this country, that in the ship combine which the gentleman from Illinois had been talking about there is not one ship that can carry the mail under this contract?

Mr. KAHN. That is a fact.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is not that true?

Mr. KAHN. That is true.

Mr. WILSON. Under the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Under the bill as it stands.

Mr. WILSON. Under the amendment as it stands.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Under the bill as it stands.

Mr. WILSON. Since the amendment was put on; yes.

Mr. KAHN. As the bill stands now.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the pending amendment. Any line that will undertake to carry the mails from San Francisco via Hawaii to Japan, China, and the Philippines will be brought in direct competition with the Japanese line, which obtains a subsidy of $600,000 a year from the Japanese Government for running between San Francisco and the points I have named. That line operates three 6,000-ton steamers on that run, namely, the America Maru, Nippon Maru, and Hongkong Maru. The history of that line is exceedingly interesting. When it was first inaugurated, it ran at an absolute loss. It would probably not have been continued if it had not been for the subsidy granted by the Japanese Government. Private capital would, in all likelihood, have refused to keep it up, for capital in Japan, as elsewhere, wants a return on its investment. After it had been in operation some four or five years it began to reach a paying basis. Its business increased, and finally the company announced that it would withdraw those ships and put on the line two 13,000-ton turbine ships to do the business. Just then the Russian war broke out. The ships, under an agreement with the Japanese Government, were taken off the line and were made auxiliary cruisers of the Japanese navy. And I am informed that the Government continued the payment of the subsidy even during the period they were in the service of the Japanese Government. They were among the fast scout ships of the Japanese naval reserve that watched the course of Rodjestvensky's fleet as it moved up along the Asiatic coast and that kept Admiral Togo informed of the Russian's progress. After that fleet had been destroyed, the Japanese Government, in order to show that they had no more fear of Russian battle ships, allowed one of those ships to be put back again on the line from China and Japan to San Francisco via Hawaii. As soon as peace was declared the other two ships went back on that run.

They took of the threads of traffic where they had dropped them prior to the war, and now again the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, which owns those ships, has announced that it intends to put on two 13,000-ton turbines as soon as possible, and that it will withdraw the present ships and put them into the South American trade. If it had not been for the subsidy paid by the Japanese Government these ships would probably never have continued on that line at all. They will have to be met in competition by any American line that undertakes to carry the mails from San Francisco via Hawaii to Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, Hongkong, and Manila. Therefore under the prevailing conditions it is absolutely necessary that any American line—I do not care who may build it—shall have a subsidy from this Government in order to be able to operate successfully under the provisions of the pending bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that debate has been exhausted.

Mr. WALDO. I understood the gentleman was not to enforce that point of order against me.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken. I said I would not oppose two speeches being made. I am not making it personal, but I must, in pursuance of my duty, insist on the regular order.

Mr. WALDO. I want to say, through the Chair, that nearly everyone else has had all the time that he desired in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the first part of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, and, without objection, the Clerk will read that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 17 and 18 strike out paragraph 5, which reads as follows: "Fifth. From a port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii to Japan, China, and the Philippines on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $350,000 a year or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $700,000 a year."

The question was taken; and the Chairman being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—98 ayes and 74 noes.

Mr. LITTAUER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. LITTAUER and Mr. TOWNSEND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—134 ayes and 100 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the other part of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 17 and 18 strike out paragraph 6, as follows: "Sixth. From a port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States north of Cape Mendocino to Japan, China, and the Philippines on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $350,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $700,000 a year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, is this debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted, and this is merely a division of the amendment.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes to speak on this amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this is a proposition with reference to the Puget Sound-Orient Line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington) there were—ayes 110, noes 97.

Mr. LITTAUER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 130, noes 105.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I now move to amend by striking out of page 18 of the bill the lines beginning with line 4 and ending with line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18 strike out lines 4 to 11, both inclusive, reading as follows: "Seventh. From a port or ports of the Pacific coast of the United States, via Hawaii and the Samoan Islands, to Australasia, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a service once in three weeks at a maximum compensation not exceeding $200,000 a year, in addition to the compensation now provided pursuant to contract under this said act of March 3, 1891."

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed ten minutes to address the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Reserving the right to object. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chairman if the ten minutes will be the total amount of time allowed in favor of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not count at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. If it may be modified to that extent, I will not object.

Mr. WALDO. I do not think the gentleman ought to insist on that.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman's remarks are against the amendment, I will object unless a like amount of time is given me to answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. WALDO. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. BURLESON. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. Regular order is demanded.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will withdraw the objection, Mr. Chairman.

Several Members called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but the objection has been renewed by a dozen gentlemen demanding the regular order. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is recognized.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state to the committee that this amendment which I have proposed at this time simply proposes to take out of the bill the last of the oriental lines provided for in this bill. It has no other object than to treat all of these Pacific lines running to the Orient in the same manner.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Has not the gentleman already spoken on this amendment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I have not. I made the amendment and have been recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment has not been under consideration by this committee until this time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. At the present time the Oceanic Line gets $2 a mile for its service. The ships projected on the Atlantic Ocean side under this bill will get $5.61 per mile. Does the gentleman think it fair to strike out the Oceanic Line when it simply asks to be put approximately where the ships on the Atlantic side will be put under this bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I certainly thought it was the proper thing to do or I should not have made the motion to amend. Mr. Chairman, from my standpoint this bounty, or subvention, or whatever you are a mind to call it is not in accordance with the best interests of the United States at this time. That is my reason for offering this amendment. The line that is already running there has complied with the necessities of the country in carrying the mail, together with the other lines that have assisted between those points. I do not believe we should annul the existing contract. I have simply desired to make the statement for the information of the committee that the whole object of this amendment was to strike out the last of the oriental lines carried in this bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call particular attention to this Oceanic Line. We are attempting in this bill to inaugurate——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one question. Is not this Oceanic Line the line that now has a mail contract with the United States Government?

Mr. LITTAUER. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why not let it carry the contract out?

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman will wait, I will answer in the course of my remarks. The matter of the amount of subsidy that ought to be allowed to any one of these routes is one that has been subject to a great deal of criticism here in the debate on this bill, because, as it was, full enough information was not had on that very point. The act of 1891 gave subsidy to ships sailing 16 knots of $2 per mile. The Oceanic Line was the only line running over a long distance, 7,300 miles, that took advantage of that provision. The mail act of 1891 has seemed to be sufficient to take care of short routes, but when the routes approach to 4,000 miles and beyond, the subsidy has been demonstrated to be clearly insufficient, and no lines have been established thereunder except the Oceanic Line.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. From San Francisco there is a line running to Tahiti, down along the blue line indicated on the map, between the Oceanic Line and the United States, a line of 4,200 miles. Is it not true that there was a contract entered into to that point, a distance of 4,200 miles, in 1905, for $1 per mile?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; but how fast does it run?

Mr. WILSON. I do not know; but it is a contract under the law of 1891.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is a contract under the law, and it is running less than 12-knot steamers.

Mr. WILSON. Where does the gentleman get that information?

Mr. LITTAUER. Because if it is under the conditions referred to by the gentleman, $1 a mile, that is what is given to 12-knot steamers.

Mr. WILSON. It has got the contract.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; and that contract is based on a law, and that law states that for ships traveling 20 knots, $4 a mile shall be given; for 16 knots, $2 a mile, and for 12 knots, $1 per mile. What I want to call attention to particularly is to the proper amount of the subsidy that ought to be allotted to each one of these lines in order to bring about the establishment of the lines.

I had stated in my opening remarks that less than 10 per cent of the first cost of the ships would not permit any of these new lines we desire, whether they are to be established to South America or to the other countries; that they must, at least, have a subsidy of 10 per cent on the first cost. Now, the act of 1891 gave $2 a mile to these "Spreckels lines," as they are called, to Samoa, Australia, and New Zealand, and it has been clearly and honestly demonstrated, to my mind, that the subsidy under that act of 1891 is not sufficient to maintain those lines. That the rate of subsidy——

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman will permit me a moment. That the rate of subsidy granted under the act of 1891 is materially lower than the subsidies granted to competing lines of other countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY and others. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded by several. Debate is exhausted, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced it was in doubt.

The CHAIRMAN (after a count). On this question the ayes are 117 and the noes 105.

Mr. LITTAUER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported there were—ayes 129, noes 111.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FORDNEY. To offer an amendment. Mr. Chairman, have I a right to go back to the second paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Anywhere in the section.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that in line 15, page 16, the sum of $400,000 be stricken out and $266,000 be substituted therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported again. There is so much confusion we can not hear it. In this case, Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has not even reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "four hundred" and insert the words "two hundred and sixty-six;" so it will read, "at a monthly compensation not exceeding $266,000."

Mr. PARKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard in opposition to this amendment?

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to this amendment. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up anybody's time on this and I have only a single sentence to utter to the committee. If we expect to maintain the Monroe doctrine over the American continent, we must adopt such measures as will bring us by mail and speedy traffic in continual intercourse with our friends and brother republics of the south, and we must spare no money that is necessary to have a speedy service. If you do not give enough, you will not get the service at all.

I have no more to say to a patriotic House.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in support of this amendment that the motion to strike out $400,000 and insert $266,000 is for the purpose of reducing the amount provided for in this bill one-third. On condition this amendment carries I will support a South American subsidy, and otherwise I will not do so.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. In a minute. When I get through I will permit an interruption. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILSON] the other day showed by figures that have been undisputed that the amount set forth in this bill would not only pay the labor on these ships, but pay for the supplies furnished to that labor and pay for the coal consumed on those ships and leave to the company $400,000 profit per year for a fortnightly service.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It will be noted his amendment reduces the $400,000 for a monthly service one-third—to $266,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Why should not the provision of $800,000 for a fortnightly service be reduced in an equal proportion?

Mr. FORDNEY. I propose to make that motion when we reach the other item, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. WATSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. WATSON. For the purpose of discussing the proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I trust the gentleman may have an opportunity to be heard. This is a proposition upon which we ought to have at least a brief discussion.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is not the intention to let anybody discuss the bill on this side of the House. It is gag rule.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, has anybody yet arisen for the purpose of opposing the amendment?

Mr. WALDO. I have.

Mr. WILSON. Regular order!

Mr. SULZER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seem to have it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 106.

Mr. GOULDEN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 140.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend paragraph 3 of section 1 by striking out, in line 2, page 17, the word "seventy-five" and inserting "one hundred" in place thereof; and in line 3, page 17, by striking out the word "one" and inserting in place thereof the word "two;" and in line 4 of page 17 by striking out the words "and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17, line 2, strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred;" in line 3, page 17, strike out "one" and insert "two;" in line 4 strike out "and fifty."

Mr. MANN. Can we have the paragraph reported as it would read, Mr. Chairman, when amended?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the paragraph read as it would read when amended.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Third. From a port or ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to the Isthmus of Panama, on steamships of the United States of not less than 14 knots speed, for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $100,000 a year, or for a weekly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $200,000 a year.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, is this the subsidy in favor of the United Fruit Line?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not give any information as to that. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, can I be heard for a minute in opposition to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. After the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO] has been heard in favor of it.

Mr. WALDO. I trust this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of any provision that this measure contains for the protection of American shipping and American labor. I believe that every step that has been taken to strike out of this bill such support as it gave to American shipping has been a direct blow to this industry, one of the greatest sources of national prosperity, wealth, and strength. I can understand how any gentleman here who is in favor of free trade can oppose this bill or oppose the bill in its original form as passed by the Senate. But I can not understand how any man who believes in and supports the principles of protection can oppose any provision that is now or has been contained within this bill. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has stated that he considers that it is not a measure for protection. The substitute that was proposed by the minority of this committee, and which they said they would be in favor of, was for a discriminating duty. Where is there anything different in principle between a discriminating duty and the payment of tonnage bounties and mail subsidies and contracts I am unable to see.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALDO. I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WALDO. The money for these payments must come largely, if not entirely, from customs dues, and it makes little difference in principle or in practice whether that be by discriminating duties or whether it be by mail contracts or tonnage bounty. The money comes from the same source, it goes to the same place and for the same purpose, and for none other, and it is entirely immaterial in principle which way it be done.

Now, I am personally in favor of and believe it would be the best method to have a discriminating duty; but unfortunately since the war, and for some time before the war, we had been entering into reciprocity treaties, until to-day we have forty-seven, I think, reciprocity treaties which prevent us from adopting a system of discriminating duties. So that practically the only measure that is left is the one proposed by the Senate and by this committee. As I understand, those in this committee who were in favor of the furthering and relieving the American commerce were in favor practically of the Senate bill. They have only reported this bill in the present form because that was the strongest form that it could be reported by the committee. The primary object of a protective tariff is to protect and foster American industries and labor.

The construction of American ships by American mechanics and labor and their sailing by American sailors are certainly industries. They are industries also which every American desires to see fostered and encouraged and, if possible, protected. Within the boundaries of the United States we protect our industries by various methods which limit, within reasonable bounds, all competition to Americans. In the case of farm products and nearly all manufactures, by a protective tariff, which is fixed at the difference between high American wages and the low wages paid in the like industries in foreign countries; in the case of transporting our mails by rail or water within our country, by allowing only citizens of this country to compete; in the case of our coastwise trade, by prohibiting any foreign vessel from engaging in that trade under penalty of forfeiture.

The question now before this House and the country is, How can our foreign or deep-sea going ships be protected?

We can not prohibit foreign ships from engaging in our foreign trade as we do in our domestic or coastwise trade; nor, owing to some forty-seven reciprocity treaties, can we allow discriminating duties on goods brought in by our own ships.

We can, however, protect and foster our merchant marine by limiting the carrying of our mails as far as possible to American ships and by paying tonnage bounties to all cargo-carrying ships engaged in foreign commerce and to our ships engaged in the deep-sea fisheries, the Government to be recompensed for such outlays by the carrying and training of a naval reserve upon all these ships; to have all mail-carrying ships built under the regulations and supervision of the Navy Department, and to have the right to use all such mail ships as transports or auxiliary cruisers in time of war.

Such a system of mail subventions and tonnage bounties would be more than repaid to the Government by the additional mail facilities with regular swift service, the large naval reserve secured at slight cost, and the cruisers and transports maintained at no expense and yet ready at a moment's notice for war use.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is mistaken in saying that this will not tend to protect and increase American industries.

The enacting of this measure will increase at once shipbuilding and put into the hands of the skilled mechanics millions of dollars yearly, to be expended for the varied farm and manufactured products of our country; and it will bring to this country, mostly to be expended in wages of labor, a large proportion of the $200,000,000 we are now paying every year to foreign ships for carrying our commerce.

Our ships can not be operated as cheaply as foreign ships because of the higher wages that must be paid to American sailors and officers. It is as necessary and as much our duty to protect American sailors and officers from underpaid foreign labor as it is labor engaged in any other kind of American industry.

This bill proposes to give such protection, and mere vituperation and polite profanity can not make it anything but protection, most necessary protection, which deserves the support of all believing in protection of American labor and American industries.

As the bill has been amended by the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, there remains nothing of tonnage bounties, nothing of any aid, except such incidental aid as arises from payment by the Government for carrying the mails. This is one of the forms of fostering and encouraging the development of a merchant marine followed by every maritime nation upon the globe.

England pays, principally to the Cunard Line, annually over $6,000,000, and has just advanced to that line to build new ships $13,000,000. France pays yearly in mail subsidies and tonnage bounties over $8,000,000; Germany, over $4,000,000; Italy, over $3,000,000; Japan, over $4,000,000.

Germany, in addition, gives differential freight rates over all Government railroads on goods to be exported in German ships.

Practically all maritime nations give aid by mail subventions or by tonnage and construction bounties, or in all these ways to their merchant marine, excepting only China and the United States.

Japan is giving $300,000 per year to her line to the Puget Sound, $600,000 per year to her line to San Francisco, and is just starting a new line with a new subsidy from San Francisco to South America. Ten new Japanese construction and steamship companies have just been started with $20,000,000 to build new ships under the tonnage and construction bounties offered by the Japanese Government.

In the last forty-five years Great Britain has paid out more than $300,000,000 in mail subsidies and tonnage bounties in aid of her merchant marine. In the same period we have paid, nearly all to her, more than $3,000,000,000 in freights for carrying our commerce.

Meanwhile we have refused to give any aid to our own shipping worth calling such.

We have given billions of dollars in aid of the transcontinental railroads, millions for irrigation and internal waterways.

We have at this session authorized the expenditure of $83,000,000 for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. Of this amount at least $20,000,000 is for the benefit of foreign shipping—that is, to deepen and improve harbors already ample for our own shipping.

Not a vote was cast against this measure to give $20,000,000 of American money to foreign shipping, and yet nearly half of this House seems to be opposed to giving one dollar in aid and protection of our own ships.

From the foundation of our Government until just before the outbreak of the civil war we practically continued aid to our shipping in one form or another.

The mail subvention aid granted in 1845 would undoubtedly have been continued as the policy of the Government to the present time had not the disturbances and sectional strife just prior to the civil war made the South solid in opposition, and able with the assistance of the Middle West to defeat it.

Now, the source of objection, the locality of objection from which all the votes against this bill, or nearly all, come, is the same source from which came the votes that in 1858 repealed the mail subsidies, that at that time made us superior to any nation on the earth in our steamship service and lines. If it had not been for these unfortunate troubles that came just before the civil war there is not the slightest doubt but that both patriotic Democrats of the South and patriotic Republicans of the North would have continued to stand together for this measure of aid and protection for our merchant marine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALDO. I ask that I may have five minutes more.

Mr. FORDNEY. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. FORDNEY. I wish to speak on this amendment.

Mr. WALDO. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment may be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington and Mr. FORDNEY addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington, a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph commencing on line 23, page 16.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 16 and 17, strike out the following paragraph:

"Third. From a port or ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to the Isthmus of Panama, on steamships of the United States of not less than 14 knots speed, for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $75,000 a year, or for a weekly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $150,000 a year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up very much of the time of the House in discussing this proposition. In the first place, it is the only proposition in the bill that provides for ships of less than 16 knots speed. We have been voting here now for some time, and a great many have been voting against the different lines. They have denounced the bill as obnoxious. I am anxious to see whether it is a matter of principle or of geography. I want to know whether this subsidy is obnoxious on the Pacific coast and whether it is virtuous on the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose that amendment. [Applause.]

As I stated when last on my feet, I am opposed to any proposition, from whatever source it comes, that in any way lessens the aid to be given to the American merchant marine, whether it be on the Gulf, on the Pacific, or on the Atlantic coast. I do not take a selfish view of this matter. It may be that people upon the Gulf coast, some of them, and those who come from the central portion of our country may oppose provisions of this bill for sectional reasons.

Mr. GRAHAM. I ask for order. We can not hear the gentleman right alongside of him.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. WALDO. I believe that this should not be a sectional or partisan matter. It is a matter that should be taken up as it was before the war, by all patriotic people from the North and from the South; and, as I was proceeding to say when last on my feet, if it had not been for the civil war and for the trouble that occurred prior to the civil war, when the leaders from the South secured a unanimous opposition to any aid to our merchant marine, and also secured, as they do to-day, additional aid from the central portion of this country, the mail contract system and aid to the merchant marine would have been continued to the present time. It would not have been a question of partisanship upon any part or any section of this country, and to-day on the oceans, both Atlantic and Pacific, we should have held the mastery of the seas.

Mr. Chairman, the fact that this is not altogether a partisan measure has been evidenced to me by various conversations I have had with gentlemen on the other side of the House who are in favor of this measure, but who dare not vote against their party organization and discipline. Numerous indorsements of this bill have come to the Merchant Marine Commission from every State that borders on the Gulf and on the Atlantic, and more than one gentleman on the other side has assured me that if he was at liberty to vote as he believed was right, and as he thought was for the benefit of the country, he would vote for the Senate bill as it passed that body. The Democratic leaders in the South are opposed to this measure because they believe that its passage would so greatly increase the commerce and the prosperity of this country as to insure the continuance of the Republican party in power for forty years yet to come.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALDO. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington to strike out paragraph 3 of section 1, on a division (demanded by Mr. GROSVENOR) there were—ayes 115, noes 85.

Mr. LITTAUER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington and Mr. LITTAUER.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 118, noes 103.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. On page 16, line 24, after the words "Gulf of Mexico," add the words "to Mexico and."

The CHAIRMAN. That entire paragraph has just been stricken from the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Then I move to amend on page 17, in line 6, after the word "to," to insert "Mexico and."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 6, after the words "United States to," insert "Mexico and:" so that it will read:

"Fourth. From a port or ports of the Pacific coast of the United States to Mexico and the Isthmus of Panama, Peru, and Chile, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year."

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is this, a new route that you want to put in?

Mr. SULZER. No; I want to include Mexico in the route.

Mr. LITTAUER. I ask that that amendment be reported again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know what the purpose of this amendment is.

Mr. SULZER. I do not understand the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say I should like to know what the purpose of the amendment is, so that I can oppose it intelligently.

Mr. SULZER. The purpose of this amendment is to have competition on the Pacific coast. There are three lines, I understand, now running from ports in the United States to Mexico and the Isthmus of Panama. Under the provisions of this bill as it stands at present there is only one line of steamships that will run from a port in the United States to the Isthmus of Panama. I want to give them all the chance to compete and to get this subsidy, if this bill passes; to give three lines an opportunity to bid instead of confining it to one line.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In which paragraph of the bill does the gentleman propose his amendment?

Mr. SULZER. Paragraph 4.

Mr. LITTAUER. What ports would the gentleman have these ships stop at? Are there any ports there where there would be any commerce worthy of the stoppage of a 16-knot ship?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; several of them.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman kindly name them?

Mr. SULZER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that every one of those steamers of these lines stops at one port in Mexico for coal and that these steamers can not at present take on passengers or freight at that or any other port in Mexico. I want to give them a chance to take on passengers and freight.

Mr. LITTAUER. From what points.

Mr. SULZER. Points in Mexico.

Mr. LITTAUER. What ports are there on the west coast of Mexico?

Mr. SULZER. Why, look at the map and find out. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTAUER. I happen to know the map, and I do not think my friend does.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; there are the ports of Acapulco, Manzanilla, and Mazatlan.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this so-called "ship-subsidy bill" a great many things have been urged in its favor. Principles, facts, and fancies have been made to do service. I have listened with a good deal of interest, but regret that I am not able to support it. I am very reluctant to oppose it, as I realize that the measure has the support of a great many good men both inside and outside of Congress. I do not care to discuss the various contentions, but, in passing, I wish to observe that it is even claimed that this is a Republican measure, and that party allegiance would require me to support it on that ground. No one has been able to show that any national convention or Congressional caucus has declared in favor of it, and it looks a little cheeky for any Member on this floor to arrogate to himself the right to determine what is the party creed. It has been somewhat amusing to listen to the various arguments that have been advanced. Some of the friends of this bill frankly admit that it is a subsidy bill; others with a great deal of earnestness have denied the imputation and have strained every argument to show that this is a very innocent and old-fashioned bill to provide for the payment of transportation for foreign mail. They urge that this does not provide for any subsidy any more than does the law that now provides for railway mail or rural route pay or for expenditures in the improvement of rivers and harbors or for the irrigation of arid lands; still no one is deceived by these contentions. The difference is perfectly plain. The bill on its face is to assist the over-sea merchant marine. The committee that framed it and presented it to this House concede that the payments to be made under this bill are not based upon the value of service in carrying the mail, but are estimated upon what they consider to be the difference in cost of carrying merchandise in foreign and American bottoms. They demand the passage of this bill to aid such commerce by establishing certain steamship lines.

It is plainly a donation to private enterprise, an aid to a business not self-supporting, and, incidentally, only for the services to be rendered. It is urged by those who admit that this is a subsidy that it is simply an extension of the protective principle of our present tariff law. There is absolutely no justification for this claim, and the friends of protection can not afford to defend such a proposition. You might as well say that the Government should pay all sums due from bankrupt estates, so as to protect creditors who might otherwise lose, as to contend that subsidies can be defended under this protective principle. None of these matters so strongly urged upon us in consideration of this question appeal to me as very pertinent. This is plainly a business proposition. Will the result sought to be accomplished by this bill justify the expenditure of the money asked? What will the American people get for the thirty or forty million dollars that is to be spent under this bill during the next ten years, or for the hundreds of millions that may be paid in the decades following? To take advantage of this proposed act certain ships will have to be built in this country to establish the routes provided for. This will employ American labor, but this work will have to be done in the next year or two. When this work has been finished some repairs may have to be made in the future, but the bill does not require or contemplate any permanent shipbuilding industry. In the construction of these ships some American material may be used, but under the law all of the material to be used in the construction of these vessels may be imported free of duty. If it is true, as contended, that foreign material is so much cheaper than American material, then foreign material will no doubt be used in the construction of these vessels. The total amount of money to be paid American labor and material men would be much less than the amount to be paid as subsidy under this bill within the first ten-year contracts.

The bill requires that some of the seamen, not to exceed in the aggregate 10,000, shall be American citizens. It is not expected that this number will be reached for many years. These seamen will not necessarily be fed or supplied by the American people, as they will frequently be in foreign ports, where they are likely to purchase a good share of what they need. What, then, is the plain, unvarnished proposition? Is it not this? To induce the building of a few American boats upon American soil, largely from foreign material, the Government is to obligate itself to pay every ten years close to $40,000,000 under a statute that authorizes an indefinite renewal of these contracts, so that the policy may eventually cost hundreds of millions? It seems to me that it would require the most pressing necessity as a justification for such a course. No such necessity is apparent. It is conceded that the American shipyards have all and more than all the work they can do, and they do not need this assistance any more than any other industry. It is not contended that the American people are suffering because ocean freight rates to foreign countries are too high. There is no necessity of this measure for relief from such rates, but, on the other hand, it is argued that ocean freight rates are so low that it is impossible for Americans to engage in competition without some subsidy. No one contends that there is any difficulty in finding ships in which to carry our commerce. Our commerece during the last decade has expanded with wonderful rapidity in every direction. Who is it that will profit by this proposed policy? It may be admitted that some slight enlargement of the domestic market might result temporarily during the building of these vessels, but this could only be temporary and very slight, if any. The shipbuilders would profit, but they can not reasonably ask for this bounty, as they are very properous under present conditions. The shipowners are the ones that will profit the most, but can we afford to make this donation. Shipowners need no charity. We can now secure the work that these ships will perform without the payment of a subsidy and at prices below the cost at which the Americans can perform the same services.

Both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts there are a number of lines engaged in carrying the mail and merchandise for which these lines are projected. Most of these lines are not subsidized. only a very small part of the foreign shipping receives subsidies. The establishment of these lines would naturally tend to create a monopoly upon the routes they traverse, as this subsidy would give an undue advantage to the lines receiving them over lines not subsidized. This would tend to discourage competition. It is argued that these subsidized boats would do much to secure trade in foreign countries, but no reason is assigned why these boats should do any more for the purpose of securing trade than the boats now engaged in the business. Several of the present lines are owned either in whole or in part by Americans and run on regular schedules. There is the same motive now as there will be if these lines are established to work for business. We are expending for the purpose of securing such foreign trade vast sums of money in the payment of the salaries and expenses of the consular agents charged with this very duty. Business is secured through these consular agents and through traveling salesmen sent out by our business people. A steamship has nothing to sell, nor is it engaged in the buying of goods for sale. To my mind there is no justification for this proposed legislation nor for entering upon a policy that will be an ever-increasing burden upon our Treasury. It is wrong in principle and will work disaster in practice.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCCALL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25483) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7676) authorizing the appointment of Allen V. Reed, now a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a commodore on the retired list of the Navy, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DICK, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. MALLORY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 8580) granting land to Anna Johnson.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate recedes from its amendment No. 9 to the bill (H. R. 8984) to amend the laws governing labor or improvements upon mining claims in Alaska.

SHIP-SUBSIDY BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I believe I am recognized for five minutes, dating from now.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I should have liked an opportunity to cross-examine the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] in regard to the propriety of his amendment, and possibly with a view to ascertaining the good faith of his proposition to amend. If I understand him now, his proposition is that there shall be added to the fourth paragraph of the amendment the words "City of Mexico," with a view that there shall be a line of steamers carrying the United States mail from a port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States to the City of Mexico.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is in error; there is nothing in the amendment about the City of Mexico—it relates only to the ports on the Pacific coast of Mexico.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would the gentleman have the ships land in a harbor or against the rocks? [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. I thought the gentleman from Ohio was too good a seaman to ask such a silly question. I am satisfied now that the gentleman is not a seaman, but a "cornfield statesman."

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am very proud of it, and if I ever see a "cornfield statesman" who undertakes to land a ship and don't know the name of the port he wants to land at I will refuse to recognize him as belonging to the brotherhood of "cornfield statesmen." [Laughter.] Now will the gentleman from New York state to the committee for its enlightenment how long a time it will take to carry the mail from Puget Sound to the particular port that he has in mind where the mails shall be landed?

Mr. SULZER. That is an arithmetical proposition and the gentleman from Ohio can figure it out as well as I can; he has the reputation of being the great mathematician of the Republican party. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. The trouble I am laboring under is that I have no data. I have the initial point, but when I come to figure the mileage I shall have to know where the terminal is.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he ever heard of the ports on the Pacific Ocean in Mexico known as the ports of Guaymas, of Acapulco, of Mazatlan, and others?

Mr. LITTAUER. How do you spell it?

Mr. SULZER. It seems that the gentleman from New York, who has asked me how to spell it, has been on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries for so brief a time that he doesn't himself know how to spell it, and probably never heard of such a port. Acapulco is one of the great ports on the Pacific coast, and nearly all the steamers from ports in the United States to ports in South America and Central America and Panama stop there to coal.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE)—ayes 8.

The CHAIRMAN (when the affirmative side had been taken). Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] desire the other side taken?

Mr. SULZER. I do not.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I demand the negative side.

The division of the committee was completed; and there were—ayes 8, noes 118.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I demand tellers.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that that is dilatory.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman who makes the motion for tellers voted with the majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, for the first time, at any rate, will entertain the motion for tellers.

The question was taken; and tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. SULZER, of New York, and Mr. LITTAUER, of New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has passed upon that.

Mr. SULZER. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that when the committee is dividing.

Mr. WATSON. I object.

Mr. SULZER. I decline to serve as a teller.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Kentucky will not serve, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any gentleman who voted for the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] who will act as teller? [After a pause.] Then the Chair will appoint the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. [Laughter.]

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported 1 aye and 93 noes.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, in pursuance of the order of the House, the committee will rise.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 529, and had directed him to report the substitute back to the House with a pending amendment.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WATSON. Is it in order to have a separate vote on any proposition that was either in the substitute and rejected in Committee of the Whole or a new proposition inserted in the substitute by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon that before the Speaker rules.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question under the order is first upon the pending amendment to the substitute reported by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, and under the rule the vote is to be taken first upon that. That is known, as the Chair is informed, as the Fordney amendment in Committee of the Whole. Then the vote will come, as the Chair understands, on the substitute.

Mr. SHERLEY. Without regard to the amendments placed upon that substitute in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it.

Mr. WATSON. But, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will pardon me a moment, I do not think the Chair has answered the specific proposition that I put.

The SPEAKER. Probably not, and the gentleman will state it again.

Mr. WATSON. In this pending substitute is a proposition for a line from a port or ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to the Isthmus of Panama. That was stricken out in the committee. What I am trying to find out now is, will it be in order at any time to have a separate vote on this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The previous question by the special order is operating. The Chair reads from the Manual:

> An amendment in the nature of a substitute is reported from the Committee of the Whole in its perfected form, amendments to the substitute not being noted in the report.

Not being noted, the Chair has no knowledge of them.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order I wish to withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole House has reported it to the House, and the gentleman has no more control over it than any other Member.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTAUER. Is the first vote on the substitute to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan?

The SPEAKER. The first vote will be upon the only amendment that is reported to the substitute, the Fordney amendment.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WATSON. The Speaker has stated that we are now to vote on the only amendment of which the Speaker has knowledge. I desire to ask whether or not the Speaker is aware of the fact that no vote on the so-called "Fordney amendment" was taken in the Committee of the Whole at all, but that it was only read for the purpose of information and was considered as pending until the committee bill had been perfected, and it was not until that time that it was in order, and therefore no vote was taken on it whatever.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the terms of the resolution it provides that the vote shall be taken on the substitute or any pending amendment thereto. This amendment, offered by the gentleman from Michigan, was pending to the substitute of the House at the time the committee rose.

The SPEAKER. The special order settles it. Reading from the special order it says "that the committee shall rise and report the bill, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the amendment in the nature of a substitute, and on any pending amendment thereto, and on the bill to a final passage."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WATSON. The point I make is that the amendment or so-called proposition of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] was never offered as an amendment, but was only read for the information of the House and notice served that it would be offered after the perfecting of the House proposition.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair can not——

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is in error.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair must depend upon the report made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, and this amendment is reported as a pending amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. It was offered as a pending amendment.

Several Members demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will report the substitute to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "that," in line 13, page 15, and insert the following:

"There shall be enrolled, in such manner and under such requirements as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, from the officers and men now and hereafter employed in the merchant marine and fisheries of the United States, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Great Lakes, such officers, petty officers, and men as may be capable of rendering services as members of a naval reserve, for duty in time of war, and who are willing to undertake such service, to be classified in grades and ratings according to their capacity as shown at time of enrollment. No man shall be thus enrolled who is not a citizen of the United States, either by birth or naturalization. These members of the Naval Reserve shall be enrolled for a period of four years, during which period they shall be subject to render service on call of the President in time of war. They shall also possess such qualifications, receive such instructions, and be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon proper audit by the Auditor for the Navy Department, to pay, out of any money to be annually appropriated therefor upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates, to each officer, petty officer, or man thus enrolled and employed in the merchant marine or fisheries, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Great Lakes as hereinafter provided, an annual retainer as follows: For each officer of the line or Engineer Corps, having the rank of lieutenant of the Naval Reserve, $110; for each officer of the line or Engineer Corps, having the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Naval Reserve, $90; for each officer of the line or Engineer Corps, having the rank of ensign in the Naval Reserve, $80; for each man with a rating of chief petty officer, $70; for each man with a rating of petty officer, first class, $60; for each man with a rating of petty officer, second class, $48; for each man with a rating of petty officer, third class, $40; for each seaman, first class, $36; for each seaman, second class, $30; for each seaman, third class, $24. Such retainer shall be paid at the end of each year of service on certificate, by the Secretary of the Navy, that the member of the Naval Reserve has satisfactorily complied with the regulations, and on certificate by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that such member has served satisfactorily for at least six months of the preceding twelve months on vessels of the United States in the merchant marine or in the deep-sea fisheries. The total number of officers, petty officers, and men enrolled in the Naval Reserve shall not at any time exceed 10,000.

"SEC. 2. That in the interest of the national defense and for the performance of the public services hereinafter specified, after July 1, 1907, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, subject to the provisions of this act, out of any money in the Treasury, to be annually appropriated therefor, upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates, to the owner or owners of any steam vessel of over 1,000 gross tons, and of any sail vessel of over 200 gross tons, hereafter built and registered in the United States or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof, engaged exclusively as a common carrier for the service of the public), subventions as hereinafter provided—that is to say, (a) the sum of $5 per gross registered ton for each vessel which has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of twelve months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed two months in making annual or extraordinary repairs; (b) the sum of $4 per gross registered ton for each vessel which, during any twelve consecutive months, has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of nine months or over, but less than twelve months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs; (c) the sum of $2.50 per gross registered ton for each vessel which, during any twelve consecutive months, has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of six months or over, but less than nine months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs.

"A vessel receiving a subvention under this section shall not receive any other subvention, subsidy, or bounty from the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 3. That before receiving any subvention under the provisions of section 2 of this act the owner or owners of any vessel shall contract, in writing, with sufficient sureties, with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to fulfill each and all of the following obligations:

"First. That said vessel may be taken and used by the United States for the national defense or for any public purpose at any time upon payment to the owner or owners of the fair actual value of the same at the time of the taking or a fair rate of hire to be agreed upon. And if there shall be a disagreement as to such fair actual value or fair rate of hire between the United States and the owner or owners of such vessel, the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to take the vessel at once, leaving the fair actual value or fair rate of hire to be determined thereafter by two impartial appraisers, one to be appointed by each of said parties, they to select a third, who shall act in such appraisement in case the two shall fail to agree, and the provisions of this subdivision shall be embodied in every contract between the vessel owner or owners and the United States.

"Second. That said vessel shall carry free of charge the mails of the United States, when the Postmaster-General shall so require, for the whole or any part of a voyage for which subvention shall be claimed.

"Third. That a vessel employed in the foreign trade shall maintain during the period so employed at least class A1 if a steam vessel, and class A1½ if a sail vessel, as such classes are now established by either the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit.

"Fourth. That all ordinary repair or overhauling of said vessel shall be made in the United States, except in cases where dry docking is necessary and no American dry dock of sufficient capacity shall be within a distance of 500 miles of the location of the ship when the repairs shall be needed.

"SEC. 4. That the contracts provided for in section 3 shall be for a period of one year and shall be renewed from time to time. At the expiration of each annual contract the owner of the vessel shall be required to prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in such manner as the said Secretary shall prescribe, that its obligations, each and all, have been satisfactorily complied with. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of subvention to which said owner shall be entitled in fulfillment of said contract and of the provisions of this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury upon proper audit shall thereupon pay the subvention due.

"SEC. 5. The subventions provided for in this act shall apply exclusively and be paid to the owner or owners of vessels engaged in foreign trade between ports in the United States and ports in South America.

"SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1907.

"SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, in whole or in part, whenever in its judgment the public interests shall so require, without, however, impairing in any wise the obligation of any specific contract then in force which shall have been entered into under the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of this act."

During the reading of the above amendment,

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the substitute amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the substitute amendment reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, perfected in Committee of the Whole House and reported with a favorable recommendation from that committee, will, when their names are called, answer "Aye," and as many as are opposed will answer "No."

Mr. FORDNEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Is this vote to be taken directly on the bill as amended, with all amendments put on in the Committee of the Whole, or some——

The SPEAKER. On the substitute amendment, with all amendments put on in Committee of the Whole. It stands as a single proposition, a perfected proposition, and the vote is upon agreeing to that substitute amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 162, answered "present" 6, not voting 55, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was rejected.

During the roll call.

The SPEAKER. Members will not assemble around the desk while the roll is being called. The clerks complain that it interferes with the discharge of their duties, and it is against the rules also.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, how is the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the affirmative. If any gentleman is not properly recorded, there is a proper way in which to get at it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it is in order, I would like to ask the Chair a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. It would hardly be in order to interrupt the roll call.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is in connection with the regularity of the call of the roll. I understand gentlemen are coming in—some of them—and going to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's understanding is misunderstanding.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very glad to hear it.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair is informed by the clerks. But it is against the rule to be about the desk during the roll call.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I make the point of order that the House is in disorder.

The SPEAKER. Everybody is quiet but the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Speaker is in disorder also. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will take his seat.

The call of the roll was concluded.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I was present and paying strict attention and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. When your name should have been called?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Call the name of the gentleman.

The name of Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi was called, and he voted "yea."

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote. I voted "aye." I vote "no."

The name of Mr. PEARRE was called, and he voted "no."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to inquire how the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUNWELL] is recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. He came in after the second roll call. I saw that.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen will be seated before business will proceed.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. Everybody will be seated. The Chair then can entertain a request. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I have gained the information I desired. I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DUNWELL].

Mr. DUNWELL. I was right in the doorway, and I did not hear my name.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name should have been called and failed to hear?

Mr. DUNWELL. I think so, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will keep order.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I rise to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will keep order. There is no point of order now pending.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to get one pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order, and will please be seated. All gentlemen will be seated. The Chair reminds the gentleman from New York that he must have been present when his name was called at one time or other of the roll call, either the first or the second; and if he did not vote, that he was giving attention and failed to hear his name called.

Mr. DUNWELL. I was giving attention, Mr. Speaker, right over here in the doorway, and did not hear my name. I think I was standing there when my name was called.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. DUNWELL was called, and he voted "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. It is a matter for the judgment of the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, but the gentleman has not said anything. He said he "believed." Now, there are two gentlemen who were watching and saw the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. Nobody except he is interested in this case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am making this point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please be seated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please be seated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will be seated, but at the same time I want to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Now, then, the gentleman from New York, after being informed by the Chair that if his name was not recorded that he must have been present on the first or second roll call when his name was called, or should have been called, and was paying attention and did not hear his name called, the Chair will again ask the gentleman——

Mr. DUNWELL. Mr. Speaker, there are three or four men here who saw me——

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman himself. Did the gentleman hear his name called?

Mr. DUNWELL. I did not.

The SPEAKER. Was he paying attention?

Mr. DUNWELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. When his name was called or ought to have been called?

Mr. DUNWELL. From the moment I put my head in that door.

The SPEAKER. But was the gentleman paying attention when his name was called or ought to have been called?

Mr. DUNWELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. DUNWELL, and he answered "No."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is all right; but the gentleman before said he "believed" he was.

The SPEAKER. After all, everything is as we believe. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the Speaker's name, and he voted in the negative.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask a recapitulation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if I am recorded.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will please take their seats. All gentlemen will take their seats.

Mr. FLOOD. Well, Mr. Speaker, we do not seem to be able to get a hearing.

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen have good lungs, and the hearing of the Chair is exceptionally fine. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know if I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.

Mr. FLOOD. I should like to have my name called.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called or should have been called? Was he listening and did he fail to hear his name?

Mr. FLOOD. I came into the Hall while the roll was being called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman understands the question? To bring himself within the rule he must have been present on the first or second call, when his name was called or should have been called, giving attention, and did not hear it. What is the gentleman's answer?

Mr. FLOOD. Well, I came in after my name was called. I was not here. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman is not entitled to vote. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I desire to know if my name is recorded.

The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.

Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana. I desire to know how I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I came in just as my name was called and voted "aye," and I should like to know if I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to know if I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called or should have been called, and did he fail to hear it?

Mr. McNARY. I was not in the Chamber, Mr. Speaker. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. Well, then, the gentleman does not come within the rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, on this roll call I voted "no." Since the vote has been taken I am told by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] that his colleague [Mr. GARNER] left here with the understanding that I would pair with him. I said distinctly to him before he went away (I understand that he has gone home) that after to-day I would pair with him, but that I did not care to pair with him to-day.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] asks for a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. BURLESON. Before that is done, in justice to my colleague [Mr. GARNER] and for his protection, I desire to state that before he left I asked him if he had protected himself with a pair, and he said that he had.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks to have the vote recapitulated. The Chair trusts the House will be in order, as the vote is close.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. For an explanation.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I want to find out whether I am recorded.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman wants to know if his name is recorded.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I want to ask the Speaker if I am too late to vote. I left the Hall on account of illness, and not for the purpose of evading my duty in any way.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called or should have been called, giving attention, and did he fail to hear his name called?

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I will say that the reason of it was that I was ill——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HUGHES. I want to explain my vote. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I want to explain it in this way, Mr. Speaker. I was paired with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], but when this controversy came up it entirely slipped my memory. I want to withdraw my vote. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. HUGHES, and he answered "present."

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On ship subsidy:

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota (in favor of) with Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee (against).

Mr. MORRELL (in favor of) with Mr. FLOYD (against).

Mr. McKINLAY of California (in favor of) with Mr. WILEY of Alabama (against).

Mr. ALLEN of Maine (in favor of) with Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. OTJEN (in favor of) with Mr. JONES of Virginia (against).

For balance of the day:

Mr. RHODES with Mr. HENRY of Texas.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. SCROGGY with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. ALLEN of Maine. Mr. Speaker, on the roll call I answered "present." I am recorded as voting "no." I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. JOHNSON.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ALLEN of Maine and he answered "present," as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Upon this vote the yeas are 155, and the nays are 159, present 7; and the House declines to lay on the table the motion to reconsider. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 164, nays 155, answered "present" 6, not voting 53, as follows:

The SPEAKER. That means to go on to the final passage. The next step is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that vote I demand the yeas and nays.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. I call up the general deficiency bill.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a point of order pending.
The SPEAKER. One moment. There seems to be a point of order pending upon the paragraph commencing with line 11, page 52. Is the point of order insisted upon?
Mr. MANN. I insist upon the point of order on the paragraph commencing on page 52, line 11, including line 20.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.
Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no authorization of law for the provision at all. It is extra compensation. It is not an audited account; one that was not paid last year.
Mr. LITTAUER. It is service performed under a regular contract.
The SPEAKER. Is that authorized?
Mr. LITTAUER. The screen-wagon service is authorized by law.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I can answer that question.
Mr. LITTAUER. I would like the gentleman from Indiana to be heard.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard upon the point of order for a minute. Under the law there is authority for contracts for screen-wagon service in cities.
The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will suspend. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that Members are seated. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Indiana.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I was stating, Mr. Speaker, that under the law the contracts for screen-wagon service in the mail department is paid for out of the regular appropriation; but in this particular case, as has happened repeatedly, where the contract has been in force, and in order to extend the service to an additional place or places which were not existing at the time of the original contract, the service was continued for that extension. In this one instance a new station was established in the city of Chicago, which must be served by the screen-wagon service not covered by the original contract. But under the general law they were obliged by the Department to extend the service and did extend it. This particular item was then adjusted between the Department and the contractor and approved by the postmaster of Chicago.
The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will allow the Chair. Under the law for a new station, was the Postmaster-General authorized to extend the service?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Undoubtedly, and compelled——
The SPEAKER. Was he authorized to require this firm—Weish & Co.—to furnish that service?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. He not only authorized, but directed them; and this is to pay for it. It was authorized under the law, and that which they did perform was under the law.
Mr. LITTAUER. But they were not paid because the Department lacked the appropriation.
The SPEAKER. Precisely. But was the Postmaster-General authorized to extend the service without reference to the appropriation?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is my understanding.
Mr. MANN. There may be equity in the claim; but so far as the point of order is concerned, these are the facts: This company had a contract with the Government for this service.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. But this is additional.
Mr. MANN. But they had no contract for this service. Then under the law the postmaster could not direct these people to perform the service, because the law requires that before service is performed there must be an advertisement for bids, and the work must be done by contract. There is no authority of law. The law is quite to the contrary; and the postmaster contracted the work to be done without advertising. Now let me ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. I have examined the letter from the Postmaster-General and the superintendent in the case. Neither one gave any information in reference to this service. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he knows if this service was for the purpose of doing work for what they call the Kinsey Street depot?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is right.

Mr. MANN. That is a new station inaugurated?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am not sure about the name, but it was a new station.

Mr. LITTAUER. And was extra service.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. My recollection is that it was the Kinsey Street station.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman sure that it is not to recoup a loss which this company incurred by reason of taking this contract?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, no.

Mr. LITTAUER. And the provision says it is to and from Kinsey Street station.

Mr. MANN. The Kinsey Street station is the Northwestern depot at Chicago, and calls for neither more nor less labor in transporting. The Northwestern depot and that are one and the same.

Mr. LITTAUER. But this was additional service outside of the contract.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me to complete my answer——

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana (continuing). This was for service in addition to the other service which was imposed upon the company. It was performed by the company, and had nothing to do with any recoup of a loss. I assure the gentleman that that is the fact.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

For additional compensation of the Secretary of Agriculture from March 4 to June 30, 1907, inclusive, $1,300.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the Bureau of Census, $10,000.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I want to express the hope that this amendment will be adopted for these reasons——

Mr. LITTAUER. We are now considering matters with reference to the postal revenue. It does not seem to me that this amendment should be offered at this place or paragraph of the bill. If the gentleman will withhold his amendment until we reach page 61, it might be germane there.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. What is that?

Mr. LITTAUER. It is not germane to the paragraph of the bill now being read.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is germane to page 61.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Well, I will withhold the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHT-HOUSE ESTABLISHMENT.

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of officers of the Army and Navy detailed for service in connection with the Light-House Establishment for the fiscal years 1906 and 1907 such sums as were expended by said officers of the Army and Navy as reimbursements for actual expenses of travel on public business between points inaccessible by ordinary means of conveyance, the same not to involve the further payment of money from the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this morning I offered an amendment, which was inserted on page 6, in line 12, for a light and fog signal at the entrance to Huntington Harbor and Lloyd Harbor, New York. I ask unanimous consent now to vacate the action by which that amendment was adopted, in order that I may offer it here, where it is more appropriate, in the bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman's request will be granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Now I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, after line 3, insert as a new item the following:

"For a light and fog signal station at the entrance to Huntington Harbor and Lloyd Harbor, New York, $40,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

For two janitors at Government houses on St. George and St. Paul islands, Alaska, for services during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, $480.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reoffer the amendment which I sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LITTAUER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we are now considering miscellaneous expenses of the Light-House Department, under the Bureau of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Certainly; but the amendment that I have offered would not be germane on page 61, where we will be considering printing and binding for the House and Senate.

Mr. LITTAUER. But the general provisions for printing and binding are on page 61.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. That is for the House and Senate.

Mr. LITTAUER. And also for the Navy Department.

Mr. MANN. For the War Department and Navy Department.

Mr. LITTAUER. Under the caption "Printing and binding" the gentleman's proposition would be germane.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Will the gentleman kindly refer me to the number of the line?

Mr. MANN. After line 12, on page 61.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is simply a question of deferring the consideration until we reach the proper paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Legislative.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, in the performance of an annual duty, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, after line 11, insert:

"To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of January, 1907, including the Capitol police, the official reporters of the Senate and House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I do not make a point of order against this amendment. It has been the yearly custom of the House to pass it, and it has always been held proper for the House itself to consider it and not raise a point of order against it. Therefore I do not make the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman. As I understood the reading of the language, it would only apply to the annual employees.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The annual and session employees. It is in the usual form, copied from the law of last year.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet to offer an amendment to that amendment. I merely wanted to make the date February 1, to cover the case of one very faithful servant who was not on the roll on January 1.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. An amendment to this amendment?

Mr. ROBERTS. No.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 11, page 55, after the word "legislative" insert:

"For additional compensation of clerks to Representatives and Delegates in Congress from March 4 to June 30, 1907, inclusive, $38,025."

Mr. LITTAUER. To that, Mr. Speaker, I make a point or order.

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will reserve it.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the point of order will not be raised, although I concede that the amendment is subject to it. The facts are these, and I simply call the attention of the House to them: Some time ago by legislation we increased the compensation of the clerks to Members and Delegates, to take effect at the beginning of the next fiscal year. Since then the House has seen fit to increase the compensation of its Members and to increase the compensation to the Cabinet officers. That increase takes effect by legislation the 4th day of March. We have by unanimous consent adopted an amendment to give all the House employees except the private clerks to Members a gratuity of a month's pay, which will amount to more per man than the whole increase which is provided in the amendment which I have offered. Now, it seems to me nonsensical to provide for the increase of the pay of clerks on the 3d or the 4th of March after the clerks will be appointed. We all know that on the 4th of March there will be many new Members who are entitled to appoint clerks. These new Members will start in with increased pay. The clerks they appoint, unless my amendment is adopted, will not have any increase in their pay until the 1st of July.

I do not object, for one, to the gratuities that we give annually to the House employees who are on the rolls, but I do say that, if for no other reason in the world than that, we should treat alike all classes of those in contact with Members of Congress, we should give this increase to our private clerks. Let their increase in pay begin with ours.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. LITTAUER. I must insist, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition to the annual compensation fixed by law for Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from Territories, and Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, they shall on and after March 4, 1907, be entitled to receive in lieu of the mileage now provided by law, mileage at the rate of 8 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular and special session of Congress.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that that paragraph on line 20, page 55, and line 2, page 56, is new legislation and a change of existing law.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman wishes to make some remarks.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman from Washington reserve it until I can explain it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the widow of Rockwood Hoar, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Massachusetts, $5,000.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I desire simply at this time to comment upon the position of the Committee on Appropriations in the action on the submission of the paragraph for a change of mileage that has just gone out on a point of order. The law for the compensation of Members until the recent change declared that the compensation——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to his amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He is doing the same thing that was being done the other day when he denounced the Democratic party. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For traveling expenses of the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, for attendance on the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, $130.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph just read for the purpose of getting an explanation of the law as to this matter of mileage.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, there are three provisions in the statute in relation to mileage.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That the gentleman is not discussing anything before the House.

Mr. LITTAUER. I am about to discuss the matter of mileage for the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will proceed in order.

Mr. LITTAUER. The Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico receives for mileage actual expenses, the Delegate from Alaska receives the stated sum of $1,500, and the Delegate from Hawaii, including all the Members, receive at this time 20 cents per mile.

Now, the law whereon the mileage now existing is based reads as follows:

That the compensation of each Senator or Representative and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest routes usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session.

That the compensation of each Senator shall be $5,000 and in addition thereto mileage, etc. It seemed that there might be a question whether or not the mileage as now provided by law was in addition to compensation or not, and many lawyers, many Members of this House and of the other, have suggested to me that there was a question whether or not any mileage to Members could hereafter be paid. In view of that doubt and, moreover, in view of the fact that the compensation for Members—and the new amendment covering our salaries declared that it was compensation—should be $7,500——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York why the committee did not report a provision for the actual traveling expenses of Members?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will tell the gentleman in a moment. We reported a provision of 8 cents a mile, believing that 8 cents did properly, fully, and actually cover the expenses, and we based our opinion on the fact that the officers of the Navy traveling to and fro received, according to law, an allowance of 8 cents per mile. The officers of the Army now receive 7 cents, although the Army allowance has varied somewhat from 10 cents to 7 and 8 cents.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is it not a fact that the Army transportation the gentleman speaks of is figured upon each trip taken?

Mr. LITTAUER. Of course, and the only trip under consideration is the trip from a Member's home to the attendance on each regular and special session of Congress; and the Army officers receive such compensation only when traveling under orders on public business.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How about Members who leave during the holiday recess and return in time to attend the session on the reassembling of the Congress?

Mr. LITTAUER. They may leave or not, as they please. They frequently do leave, without there being a holiday recess. The provision of the committee would apply for mileage going to and returning from each regular and special session of Congress at 8 cents a mile, which we believed to be a fair and nearly actual proper expense.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. MACON. Does not the gentleman think that the present salary of $7,500 per annum is a sufficient compensation for Members of this House without mileage?

Mr. LITTAUER. I think it is a proper compensation, and I think there should be nothing in the nature of a perquisite in addition thereto. I think that $7,500 is proper compensation, and that the mileage ought to be based on practically what is actually expended, and that the fairest and most decent way of reaching what the actual expense is, is to take the experience had in other Departments, and we believe that 8 cents represents that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman use the word "compensation" there for the word "salary"—a $7,500 salary? That is what the law says.

Mr. LITTAUER. Well, salary stands for compensation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, it ought to be salary, for that is what it means. Mileage is not compensation. Mileage is mileage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves his point of order, and, under the five-minute rule, the five minutes have expired. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules and to offer as an amendment the provision for mileage which has just been taken out on a point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is clearly of opinion that it is not in order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Would it be in order for the Committee on Rules to formulate a rule——

The SPEAKER. We are now considering the general deficiency bill under the five-minute rule in the House. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, $25,000.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, in line 8, strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-five."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, $25,000.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, after line 19, insert:
"To pay E. P. Walker for services as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, $320."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For janitor to the file room, at $60 per month, $954; for two messengers to disbursing officers, at $900 each per annum, $2,385; for additional assistant enrolling clerk, at $1,800 per annum, $2,385; for additional compensation of the enrolling clerk, at $500 per annum, $662.50; for additional compensation of assistant doorkeeper, at $500 per annum, $662.50; for additional compensation of Department messenger, at $250 per annum, $331.26; for additional compensation of superintendent of the folding room, at $500 per annum, $662.50; for additional compensation of the deputy sergeant-at-arms, at $500 per annum, $662.50; for additional compensation of chief clerk of the folding room, at $200 per annum, $265; for additional compensation of the assistant Department messenger, at $200 per annum, $265; for additional compensation of four clerks in folding room, at $400 each per annum, $2,120.04; for additional compensation of the foreman of the folding room, at the rate of $300 per annum, $397.50; for stenographer to journal clerk, at $75 per month, $1,192.50; for assistant clerk to the Committee on Pensions from March 3, 1907, to June 30, 1908, inclusive, $1,600 per annum, $2,124.46; for additional compensation of the messenger to the Speaker, at $240 per annum, $318; for additional compensation to R. E. Fleharty, assistant stationery clerk, by detail, at the rate of $400 per annum, $530; for additional compensation of messenger to chief clerk, at $300 per annum, $397.50; in all, $16,315.36.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 59, in lines 21, 22, and 23, strike out "in all, $16,315.36," and insert "for additional compensation of the assistant in the clerk's office, at $200 per annum, $264.90; for additional compensation of the assistant in the disbursing office, at $200 per annum, $264.90; for additional compensation to two chief pages, at $300 each per annum, $795; for additional compensation for the two telegraph operators, at $200 each per annum, $530; for additional compensation of the superintendent, reporters' gallery, at $200 per annum, $265; for an annual clerk to the Committee on Enrolled Bills (in lieu of a session clerk), at $2,000 per annum, $2,649.90; for a janitor to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, index clerk's office, and guard room, at $720 per annum, $954; in all, $21,198.06."

And on page 58, in line 2, after the word "seventh," strike out the word "and", and after the word "sixteenth" insert the words "and February 28."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, these appropriations are simply to take care of the resolutions passed by the House on yesterday.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the gentleman sure they will take care of the resolutions passed on yesterday?

Mr. LITTAUER. The disbursing clerk so states.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional compensation to the two special employees of the House of Representatives, John T. Chauncey and Paul D. Porter, $300 per annum, $600.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I suppose this is subject to a point of order, and it is for the benefit of the two special employees, Mr. Chauncey and Mr. Porter. Mr. Speaker, while I meant to make the point of order against any personal requests, I do not think I am called upon to make——

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask if Mr. Chauncey is a new employee?

Mr. LITTAUER. No; he is one of the oldest.

Mr. OLMSTED. How old?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not know; long before my time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention that this resolution proposes to fix the annual salaries of the special employees of the House. Now, each House controls the compensation to be paid to the special employees who are employed by resolution of that House, and I do not think it belongs to this House to fix the salaries for the special employees for the next House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to strike from the amendment the words "per annum."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his amendment.

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire from the gentleman from Minnesota if it is not a fact that these two employees, certainly Captain Chauncey, are carried on an annual appropriation by name?

Mr. TAWNEY. Under the resolution.

Mr. MANN. No; by act of Congress in the annual appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the appropriation bill, but the resolution authorizing their employment at the beginning of each Congress is mentioned in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think the gentleman is mistaken. Captain Chauncey draws pay after the 1st of July, although there is no Congress that will be in session then with authority to employ a special employee.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is true; but the gentleman from Illinois knows very well that this Congress can not bind the next House as to the compensation that will be paid to their special employees.

Mr. MANN. Why, we can bind the House by act of Congress, fixing by name, as we do in the case of Mr. Chauncey, Joel Grayson, and one or two others, fixing their salaries. I do not care further than that. But we do bind them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment to his amendment by striking out the words "per annum." The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 21, after the word "cents," add "for additional compensation to John J. Boobar, librarian, at $300 per annum, $397.50; to George W. Sabine, assistant librarian, at $300 per annum, $397.50; to R. F. Bishop, assistant librarian, at $300 per annum, $397.50; to J. F. Brownlow, assistant in library, at $200 per annum, $265."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order just for a minute?

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman desires to make an explanation, I will reserve it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know nothing particular about this amendment except in reference to Mr. Sabine, who serves us over in this library here, and I would like, and I think the House would like, to give him additional compensation. I want to know if the gentleman from New York, if I offered an amendment simply to pay Mr. Sabine an additional compensation of $200 for his services, would make a point of order on it?

Mr. LITTAUER. I am sure the gentleman probably ought to have additional compensation, but I think this is a very irregular way of getting it. The Committee on Accounts could have passed upon this matter and presented a resolution to the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I be permitted to reply to the gentleman just a moment? This gentleman has not sought by resolution, as many have, to increase his compensation by appealing to the Committee on Accounts. I apprehend there is no more faithful, efficient, and no more useful member of the force of this House than Mr. Sabine, who is an assistant librarian in this library; and if he ought to have it, let us give it to him.

Mr. LITTAUER. I agree with that entirely, but this is very irregular.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] insist on his point of order?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. Do I understand the gentleman to insist on his point of order?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida desires to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, line 24, after word "dollars," insert:
"For additional compensation of the assistant clerk of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors at $300 per annum, $407.50."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I hope the gentleman will withhold it.

Mr. LITTAUER. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment that ought really to be adopted. There is no more useful clerk than the assistant clerk to the Rivers and Harbors Committee. There is no one employed by a committee to do work here who does any more work in a year or any given time than the assistant clerk of that committee. Any Member who has been around this House and has noticed the work that is being done by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, especially by the chairman of that committee, will understand at once that the clerk or the assistant clerk who assists him in the performance of his numerous and burdensome duties is entitled to much more than he is now receiving—the sum of $1,400 a year, I believe. Mr. Speaker, I believe this amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I can not enter upon the merits of this matter. The House has regular machinery to handle this work, and it ought to be handled regularly.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold his point of order for just a moment. The service of this clerk is of an exceptional nature. He has been here the whole year.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would suggest that it should have gone before the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It seems that increases of salaries have been made in considerable numbers, and this is certainly as deserving as any one of them. I trust the gentleman will withdraw the point of order in this case and points of order against all such items.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter no part of any money appropriated for contingent or miscellaneous expenses of the Senate or House of Representatives shall be used to pay additional compensation to any officer or employee of either House of Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order against that provision.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. BARTLETT. It is the provision on page 59, commencing with line 24 and ending on line 2, page 60, with the word "Congress."

Mr. LITTAUER. It is a necessary provision of law now.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not. The gentleman is mistaken, and I desire to be heard upon it. Mr. Speaker, that never was the law until the last legislative appropriation bill. On page 9 of the printed bill, which I hold in my hand, the act approved June 22, 1906, carried this provision:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, $50,000.

That statute provided for the appropriation known as the "contingent fund" of the House, and the Committee on Appropriations in 1906 undertook to limit by legislation the right of the House to control that provision in the matter.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask him this question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Are these words now in this bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. These words?

The SPEAKER. Yes; "hereafter."

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. They have not appeared heretofore in the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from New York say?

Mr. LITTAUER. When the appropriation was made and that appropriation was exhausted, this one became available.

The SPEAKER. What the Chair desires to get at is whether this is the law now.

Mr. LITTAUER. The law, according to the interpretation of the Comptroller of the Treasury, is not as it stands here.

The SPEAKER. Then it is clearly legislation.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is new legislation, but most desirable legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I be permitted, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman claims this is legislation?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from New York admits it. And this is a proposition to change the law?

Mr. TAWNEY. This is a proposition to change the law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. But I do insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is with the gentleman, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse the Official Reporters of Debates and the official stenographers to committees for moneys actually paid out by them for clerical hire and extra clerical services from March 4, 1906, to March 4, 1907, $750 each, and to John J. Cameron, $240; in all $7,740.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 8, page 60, the following:
"And $25 per month for extra clerical services of the assistant committee stenographers from March 1, 1907, to March 1, 1908, inclusive, in regular monthly payments."

Mr. LITTAUER. I must make the point of order against that.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think it is subject to the point of order. In the first place, I think the entire paragraph, beginning with line 30, itself is out of order, and is legislation under the rules of the House. Even though this would be out of order, if sought to be appended to a proposition which was in order, inasmuch as we are seeking now to make an amendment to a proposition that in itself is out of order, this is not subject to the point of order. The amendment which I offer is germane to the pending paragraph, and the pending paragraph itself is out of order.

The SPEAKER. Ah, but the pending paragraph escapes the point of order, because it was not made.

Mr. WATSON. The mere fact that it was not made makes no difference; it is clearly legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it germane?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; my amendment is clearly germane to the paragraph.

Mr. OLMSTED. What does the amendment apply to?

Mr. WATSON. It applies to the pay of the assistant stenographer to committees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING.

Printing and binding for the Navy Department (Hydrographic Office), which sum is in addition to the $15,000 authorized to be expended for the work of the Hydrographic Office by the act of June 30, 1906, $2,200.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, after line 12, insert:
"For printing and binding in the Bureau of the Census, $10,000."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this item is subject to a point of order, but I trust the House will not vote to include this amendment.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. I want to explain why I think this amendment ought to pass. It was apparent to the committee that the Government, through the Census Office and through its special agents, did obtain some very valuable reports. These reports relate to a variety of subjects. For instance, the Director of the Census has a report upon iron, one upon steel, one upon lumber, and these reports have already been made at the expense of the Government, but he has not a dollar to pay for their printing. This sum simply authorizes him to print and bind such reports as have already been made to the Office and for which he has stated he has a very great demand from all over this country. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that when that condition of affairs exists, and is not controverted or denied, we at least ought to furnish him a sufficient sum to print and bind these reports, which are being demanded throughout the length and breadth of the country.

Mr. LITTAUER. I have no doubt that the reports in question are valuable to some people, but the committee refused to include this provision in the bill, because the committee felt that a full and ample appropriation had been made for this purpose, and it simply demanded that the bureau chiefs live within the appropriations that we make for them. If you should permit them to come back for such additional appropriations as this one, we would have a perfect flood from everyone, so that especially in the item of printing and binding there would be no end to it. We made a very ample allowance for printing to the Census Bureau, and we feel that they should live within that ample allowance and let these reports be printed after the 1st day of next July.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. The gentleman certainly understands that after the 1st of July the facts will be useless to anybody.

Mr. LITTAUER. I think the facts may be six or seven years old now.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Not at all. My understanding is that these reports are reports that have been made recently.

Mr. LITTAUER. I know nothing to substantiate that idea.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. I do not understand that they are old reports at all.

Mr. LITTAUER. My understanding is that they may be reports of the census of 1900.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Not at all.

Mr. BURLESON. Even if that were true, they would be valuable for purposes of comparison.

Mr. LITTAUER. That is true; but whether they are printed in the month of March or April or the month of July will not make very much difference with the progress of our business in general, and we felt that we made ample provision for the business of the Census Office, and that it was better to leave it in that way.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

To expedite the preparation of that part of the new index to the Statutes at Large, which is an index to the statutes enacted since the year 1873, and to provide for the additional service in the law library necessary to the printing of the said index, namely, for typewriting a printer's copy of the card index and for proof reading, $5,000, the same to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1908: Provided, That when the plan of the new index of the Statutes at Large shall have been approved by the Judiciary Committee of either House of Congress the preparation of the said index may be commenced, notwithstanding the provision to the contrary in any act of Congress heretofore enacted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I raise a point of order on the proviso at the bottom of page 61.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the proviso, which is plainly a matter of legislation. It undertakes to repeal an act of Congress.

Mr. LITTAUER. I am quite content to have the gentleman make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained as to the proviso.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of saying something about the mileage question. It is evidently proper and right that one Representative should not be paid a greater salary than another. If there were no mileage and no allowance for traveling expenses at all, the result would be that a Representative in Congress from Maryland would receive a larger salary than one from Texas, and a Representative from Virginia a larger salary than one from California. While it is true, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the people of the United States will view with favor, perhaps not even with tolerance, the adjournment of this Congress without revising the mileage which is now being paid after our salaries have been increased.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that there should be an allowance for actual traveling expenses, the Representative to certify what those actual traveling expenses were. There is, in my opinion, a very grave objection to that, too. The man who was unscrupulous, if there be such in the House, would go as expensively as he well could and charge it all to the Government. Some few very unscrupulous persons might certify to something that had not been expended, and the man who was scrupulous and thoroughly honest would try when he was traveling at the expense of the Government to expend as little as he could. The upshot would be that there might be engendered a state of things which might cause scandal and criticism, so that it seems to me that there ought to be in some way a method that would enable the House to fix, perhaps, a rate per mile which would suit approximately, if not perfectly or mathematically accurate, the amount of money that a man traveling would reasonably expend. I understand that 8 cents a mile was fixed. Perhaps that is not enough, and that 10 cents would be better. If it is too much, then it might be fixed at 6 cents. But at any rate, we ought not to run the risk of having a certification or questions arising out of a certification—one man certifying, perhaps, to his claret and cigars and another man certifying to a meal less than he would be willing to pay for if he was traveling at the expense of his own pocket.

I wanted to say this much because I want to put my voice on record in protest against this Congress adjourning without a reduction of the mileage rate. I did hope that the point of order would not be made when this question came up. I hope yet that it will be withdrawn. After it is withdrawn, if the House thinks that the rate is too little, they can move to make it 10 cents, but at any rate the House can act upon it. I hope that the House will not adjourn without acting on the question.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that Members of Congress with large families—for instance, a number of children—from the far West, that it is desirable for him to come to Congress at the long session and bring his family with him, or to come and leave his family at home?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe, for one, that it is desirable and that we should encourage him to bring his family with him; but I believe that 10 cents a mile would bring any average family to Washington—in other words, if we cut the present mileage in two. I would allow, it seems to me, when I was trying to approximate the actual traveling expenses not only the actual traveling expenses of the man, but for the average family, say, a wife and two children. Ten cents would more than cover that, by my calculation. I went into it with my own home in view, so that I could determine. I took the price of the tickets and then what it would amount to, and it would more than pay it.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman provided for half-fare tickets.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I did not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 43, the second paragraph, for the purpose of making a correction in the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, will that preclude the offering of an amendment as a new section now?

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to return to page 43 for the purpose of making a correction. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, line 11, strike out the word "Walter" and insert the word "Orville."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. I have several copies of that amendment here, which Members can obtain if they desire.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, to save time I will state that I propose to make a point of order against this amendment. I suppose it ought to be printed in the RECORD. I will reserve the right to make the point of order against it until I can ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered as read, and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered as read, and printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Said committee shall recommend to the President for each Department a readjustment and classification of the force of said Department in accordance with the foregoing schedules, so as to bring about a general uniformity of compensation in all offices for the same kind and amount of work; and for the fiscal year 1909, and annually thereafter, each Department shall prepare and submit its estimates for clerical and other services in the Departments in accordance with the classification herein provided for and shall apportion the clerks of the different classes according to the work they are actually performing.

"Hereafter all promotions shall be based on efficiency, and it is specifically declared to be the duty of chiefs of divisions to make recommendations for demotion where the interests of the public service require it, and any chief of division who fails to comply with this requirement shall be summarily dismissed from the public service.
"Promotion in each class and subdivision thereof shall be made in each Executive Department or other Government establishment in Washington by a board composed of three officials of said Department appointed by the Secretary thereof."

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands now that the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is entirely new legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York having been rejected on a point of order, I respectfully submit the same amendment in a different form. The amendment that I submit provides for a comprehensive reclassification of the public service in the Executive Departments and other governmental establishments here in Washington. This amendment, however, omits the salaries for these classes, and authorizes the committee to be appointed by the President to readjust the work in the Departments to also investigate and report its recommendations in regard to the salaries to be paid for the work done in the various classes proposed.

I offer the following amendment. I ask, however, unanimous consent that it may be considered as having been read and be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, there is no question that it is obnoxious to the rule against a change of existing law. I do not claim that it is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that this amendment may be considered as read and be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 3. That the following schedule of classification of positions and gradation of employees of the Executive Departments and other Government establishments in Washington is hereby adopted, to take effect on and after July 1, 1898, to supersede the classifications heretofore recognized by law, namely:

"CLERICAL CLASSES.

"SENIOR CLERKS.—Employees who are assigned to work largely supervisory, or requiring the highest order of clerical ability, involving much original thought, consideration, and investigation:
"Grade A.
"Grade B.
"Grade C.
"Grade D.
"Grade E.
"CLERKS.—Employees who are assigned to work more or less routine, involving responsibility, special ability, and original thought, consideration, and investigation:
"Grade A.
"Grade B.
"Grade C.
"Grade D.
"Grade E.
"JUNIOR CLERKS.—Employees who are assigned to clerical work of a routine character requiring but little original thought or consideration, but requiring judgment, responsibility, and special skill:
"Grade A.
"Grade B.
"Grade C.
"Grade D.
"Grade E.
"UNDER CLERKS.—Employees who are assigned to clerical work of a simple or routine character requiring care, accuracy, and skill:
"Grade A.
"Grade B.
"Grade C.
"Grade D.
"Grade E.

"SUBCLERICAL CLASS.

"Employees whose duties are not clerical or mechanical, but require some special skill, or involve personal responsibility, as messengers, watchmen, skilled laborers, sorters, and counters:
"Grade A.
"Grade B.
"Grade C.
"Grade D.
"Employees engaged in rough and unskilled work, as laborers generally:
"Grade A.
"Grade B.
"Employees who enter the service at an early age and are engaged in light work, as messenger boys:
"Grade A.
"Grade B.
"Grade C.
"Grade D.
"Employees whose work occupies only a part of the time each day, as charwomen and janitors:
"Grade A.
"Grade B.
"Grade C.
"Salaries of employees engaged in professional, technical, or scientific work shall conform as far as possible to the classes and grades of the above schedules.
"That as soon as practicable after the passage of this act a committee of not exceeding nine persons shall be appointed by the President, whose duty it shall be to consider the character of work performed by the clerks in the several bureaus and offices in the Executive Departments and other Government establishments in the city of Washington and the salaries now paid therefor. Said committee shall recommend to the President for each Department a readjustment and classification of the force of said Department in accordance with the foregoing schedules, so as to bring about a general uniformity of compensation in all offices for the same kind and amount of work; and said committee shall also recommend the minimum and maximum compensation to the clerks of the several classes herein provided for; and for the fiscal year 1909, and annually thereafter, each Department shall prepare and submit its estimates for clerical and other services in the Departments in accordance with the classification herein provided for and shall apportion the clerks of the different classes according to the work they are actually performing.
"In no event shall any person whose principal duties are within a given class be paid more than the maximum salary for said class, and the number of employees specifically appropriated for in any branch of the service in any of the Executive Departments or other Government establishments in Washington shall not be increased, but may be diminished.
"Hereafter all promotions shall be based on efficiency, and it is specifically declared to be the duty of chiefs of divisions to make recommendations for demotion where the interests of the public service require it, and any chief of division who fails to comply with this requirement shall be summarily dismissed from the public service.
"Promotion in each class and subdivision thereof shall be made in each Executive Department or other Government establishment in Washington by a board composed of three officials of said Department appointed by the Secretary thereof.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair understands that to that the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Minnesota desires to be heard——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Minnesota confesses the point of order. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman desires to be heard. He no doubt can get unanimous consent if he does desire to be heard.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a statement, and ask unanimous consent that I may do so, concerning the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York and the amendment offered by myself.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Minnesota will answer me one question: Does his amendment cover lines 7 to 12 on page 5 of this provision—"and the number of employees specifically appropriated for in any branch of the service in any of the Executive Departments or other governmental establishments in Washington shall not be increased, but may be diminished?"

Mr. TAWNEY. That provision was omitted from the amendment, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House—for what length of time?

Mr. TAWNEY. For five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that the service in the various Departments here at the seat of government is more or less in a demoralized condition so far as classification is concerned. Under the statute of 1856 we have four classes receiving compensation from $1,200 to $1,800. That is the only classification that we have to-day. But that classification is not fixed with reference to the character of work as much as it is with regard to the ability of the clerk to secure the favor of the bureau chief or the chief of division in securing promotion to higher salaried positions. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is the duty of Congress to thoroughly investigate this question and reclassify the service. At the beginning of this Congress, when the legislative bill was reported to the House, the Members of the House will recall the fact that it was almost impossible for us to proceed with the consideration of the legislative bill because so many positions were provided for in that bill for which there was no authority in law. That has resulted from the growth of the service. The present service has entirely outgrown that classification. The President of the United States almost two years ago appointed a commission, consisting of some administrative officers, for the purpose of investigating this question.

They have made a report, and the principle of the report made by the Keep Commission in respect to a reclassification of the service is embodied in the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York and myself. That principle is to divide the work in the Departments into four main heads or classes and then subdivide each of these four main classes into from three to four different grades, and then provide a minimum and a maximum salary, so that the clerks employed under one main head will all be doing the same kind of work, and there will be an opportunity for more rapid advancement or promotion until the clerk in the lower grade reaches the highest grade in each class. Then when he is promoted into another class he receives an additional compensation because of the different kind of work to be done in that class. Now, the necessity for this is apparent, and the Committee on Appropriations, after having carefully considered the Keep Commission report, evolved this plan whereby, if it were adopted by Congress now, the classification would be fixed—that is, there would be four main classes, each class subdivided into four different grades. Then when the estimates are submitted to Congress at the next session for the clerical service in the various Departments here in Washington, the estimates would follow this classification thus fixed, and Congress would then fix the compensation for each class. It was believed by the committee that the necessity for this was so urgent that the matter ought to be submitted to Congress for its consideration, and for that reason the committee authorized the gentleman in charge of the bill to report this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the point of order has been made upon this matter.

The SPEAKER. Made and sustained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And sustained; and I make the point of order we are considering nothing.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, you will recall, at your own suggestion, we passed over by unanimous consent an amendment, which was offered by myself, on page 26.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule on that amendment. This is an amendment to the text, on page 26. The Chair has examined with some care the various acts that have been passed touching the Jamestown Exposition, the appropriations that have been made and limitations upon the expenditures as to the Army and Navy and militia; the Chair has gone over it with much care, and without taking the time to state further about it, the Chair is satisfied that the amendment is subject to the point of order, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment as a new section.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment as a new section.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] asked the Speaker before the completion of the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair indicated that in the opinion of the Chair the gentleman would be recognized. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses constitutional convention of proposed State of Oklahoma until constitution is completed, $28,440, itemized as follows: Per diem of members, thirty days, $15,440; rent, light, fuel, committee rooms, stationery, and supplies, $3,000; employees of convention, $10,000.

For expenses second election, $84,550, itemized as follows:

"1. One thousand six hundred and seventy-eight election precincts, 5 men at each precinct, $2 per day, and two days, $20 for each precinct.

"2. Fifty-six election commissioners to perform the same duties at the second election as required of them at the first election, $11,200.

"3. One thousand six hundred and seventy-eight election inspectors, at an average of $5 each, $8,200.

"4. Printing bill, including ballots, poll books, sample ballots, affidavits, notices, vouchers, and stationery, $18,000.

"5. Ballot boxes, booths, and expenses of distributing, including drayage, freight, and express, $6,000.

"6. Rent of polling places, 800 at $3, estimated, $2,400.

"7. Clerical help, preparing tickets, distributing same, canvassing returns, preparing abstracts and copies to be transmitted to the President of the United States, $5,000."

For printing for said convention, under contracts of said convention, and printing not contracted for, $20,000.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment. It is new legislation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, how can this be subject to a point of order when it is an existing project? Congress has admitted the State of Oklahoma, and it is simply a defrayment of the expense of making the new State. Congress appropriated money for the first sixty days of the convention and for the first election. Why would it be out of order to make an appropriation for the continuing thirty days and for the second election, which is just as necessary as the first?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, as a matter of fact, thinks that in the purview of legislation authorizing the constitutional convention, in connection with the rules of the House, that this is not a continuing project under the law so as to make it in order. It may be a continuing constitutional convention. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill as amended.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTAUER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CERTAIN HOMESTEAD SETTLERS, ALABAMA.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6704) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama," approved February 24, 1905, as amended.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama," approved February 24, 1905, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That where any homestead entry heretofore allowed by the officers of the Land Department for lands within the limits of the grant made by act of Congress approved June 3, 1856 (11 Stats., p. 18), to the State of Alabama in aid of the construction of the railroad known as the "Mobile and Girard Railroad" has been canceled because of a superior claim to the land through purchase from the railroad company, which claim has been held to have been confirmed and a confirmatory patent issued for the land under the provisions of section 4 of the act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stats., p. 556), or where any homestead entry has been made on lands granted by the Congress of the United States to the State of Alabama, to aid in the construction of the Mobile and Girard Railroad, or the Tennessee and Coosa Railroad, which said lands lie opposite to and coterminous with those portions of either of said roads which were constructed prior to the passage of the forfeiture act of September 29, 1890 (25 Stats., p. 496), the title to which is asserted and claimed by the vendee, or successor in interest of either of said railroad companies, such homesteader is hereby accorded the privilege of transferring his claim thus initiated under the homestead laws to any other nonmineral unappropriated public land subject to homestead entry, with full credit for the period of residence and for improvements made upon his said homestead entry prior to the order of its cancellation, or prior to the passage of this act: Provided, That he has not forfeited or voluntarily abandoned his homestead claim and that his application for transfer is presented within one year from the date of the passage of this act.

"Should such homesteader elect, however, to retain the tract embraced in his homestead entry heretofore canceled, or the tract so entered by him, the title to which may be claimed by the vendee or successor in interest of either of said railroad companies, the holder of the patented title, through the railroad grant, or of the title so claimed and asserted by any person, association, or corporation under either of said railroad grants as aforesaid shall thereupon be invited to relinquish or reconvey to the United States of America the land included in such homestead entry, and upon filing such relinquishment or reconveyance the party making such relinquishment or reconveyance shall be entitled to select and receive patent for an equal quantity of nontimbered, nonmineral, and unappropriated surveyed public lands subject to homestead entry within three years after the passage of this act, and upon the filing of such relinquishment or reconveyance all right, title, and interest under and through either of the said railroad grants or the confirmatory patent hereinbefore referred to shall revert to the United States, and the tract thus relinquished or reconveyed shall be treated and disposed of as other public lands of the United States: Provided, however, That such previous homesteader shall be reinstated in his rights and permitted to complete title to the land previously entered as though no cancellation of his homestead entry had been made or the title to the land had not been claimed and asserted adversely to him as aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules and regulations for the administration of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Add at the end of section 1 the following:

"Provided, That such homesteader or vendee or successor in interest of either of said railroad companies shall not be permitted to select more than 160 acres of land in one section, nor more than 320 acres of contiguous lands."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman explain the bill.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to give relief not to the holders of the railroad title, but to the homesteaders whose deeds have been set aside by the courts and who are in danger of being ejected from their lands at the suits of the holders of the railroad title. This is the essential and primary idea that must be borne in mind in the consideration of this bill.

The holders of the railroad title need no legislation and are not seeking anything at the hands of Congress. The bill is not for their benefit. At the same time, Congress must recognize the fact that in order to get the holders of the railroad conveyance to give up lands to which the courts have held them to have a good and complete title some consideration must be shown to them and they must be given some rights which will be acceptable to them, else they will not relinquish the title they hold for the benefit of the homesteaders to whom patents were erroneously issued by the Interior Department under a misinterpretation of the statute. In other words, the situation is simply this: The homesteaders, in nearly all cases, relying upon the action of the Land Department in throwing these lands open to settlement and entry, in inviting them to make entry of these lands, believing that they were subject to entry under the homestead law (the Land Department having so decided), have gone upon the lands, made improvements thereon, lived there the requisite period required by the homestead law, made their final proof, and in most instances have secured each a patent of the United States for the lands so settled upon and improved by them. Now, after all this has been done, they are in the peculiar and distressing position of not possessing any valid titles that the courts will recognize. Instead, the supreme court of the State of Alabama, following the rule of the United States Supreme Court as announced in the Tennessee and Coosa case (176 U. S., 242), to the effect that lands opposite the constructed portion of the roads were not forfeited to the Government by the forfeiture act of 1890, have held that these lands passed to and were confirmed in the purchasers from the railroad company, and that they were never in fact subject to homestead entry.

"It is a condition and not a theory," therefore, that confronts us. If the homesteaders are to have any relief at all, if they are to be permitted to remain on their homesteads, which they have improved and for which they have received patents from the United States, then some such amicable and equitable arrangement must be made with the holders of the railroad title as will be satisfactory to them, in order to induce them to relinquish their own title in the interest and for the benefit of the homesteaders. In the common vernacular, those holders of the railroad title are "standing pat" on what the courts have given them, and, so far as their interests are concerned, as above stated, they need no remedial legislation and are not asking anything in that line at the hands of Congress. They are satisfied to stand upon the title they have under their purchase from the railroad company, which has already been confirmed to them by the highest tribunal in Alabama and the Supreme Court of the United States. The only persons who need relief, and who are seeking it by this bill, are the homesteaders whose claims have been canceled and annulled by the courts.

What is the equity of these homesteaders? As stated above, they made their entries upon the invitation of the United States Government. The Land Department of the United States restored these lands to the public domain and informed the people of Alabama that they were subject to homestead entry.

The Department said to these people that if they would make homestead entry of these lands and comply with the homestead law, they would receive a patent of the United States therefor, which patent would give them a good title as against the whole world, and especially against the holders of the railroad title, being purchasers from the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company and its grantees. The settlers, accepting as true the proposition of the Government, as voiced by the Land Department, made their entries in good faith, have complied with the law, and received their patents, only to be told by the courts that, although they have done and performed all the things required of them under the homestead law, they nevertheless have no title at all, because the lands were not, in fact, as a matter of law, subject to homestead entry, but were in truth already the property of the purchasers under the railroad grant. This is the lamentable condition of the homesteaders at the present time.

Now, what relief can be given to them? This bill proposes as one method of relief to permit them to transfer their claims to other nontimbered and nonmineral public lands subject to homestead entry, with full credit for their residence and improvements they have made upon their homestead entries. But this relief, as is readily perceived, will not be a complete relief. This will not give them the improvements already erected upon their homesteads, but if their rights of transfer shall be exercised by them, all they can receive in that event will be a tract of vacant land without improvements. The other measure of relief contained in the bill under consideration is to permit them to retain the lands upon which they have settled and which they have improved, the lands where they have lived and where their homes have been for many years, provided the holders under the railroad grant will relinquish their superior titles thereto. Hence, as a prerequisite to this relief, it will be necessary to get these holders of the titles under the railroad grant to relinquish such titles to the United States. Here arises the question as to what inducements can be offered to the holders of these railroad titles to secure such relinquishments.

These lands are quite valuable. They are in one of the oldest settled sections of the State of Alabama. It stands to reason, therefore, that these holders of the railroad title will not give up these lands simply for the privilege of taking other lands in the State of Alabama. That has been absolutely demonstrated by the results of the act of March 3, 1903, commonly known as the "Wiley Act." That act giving the holders of the titles held under the railroad grant the right to take other lands in Alabama upon the relinquishment of the titles so held by them has been on the statute books for nearly four years, and yet not an acre of the lands along the line of the completed portion of the road under the Mobile and Girard grant, held by the purchasers thereunder, has been relinquished and other lands selected in lieu thereof; and this for the very good reason that there are no lands in Alabama now subject to homestead entry of sufficient value to induce such relinquishment and selection. This is perfectly apparent and can be verified from the records of the General Land Office. Hence, as before stated, in order to secure relinquishments of these titles under the railroad grant, there must be some sufficient reciprocal inducement offered to the holders of these titles. They will have to be assured that they will secure by the exchange provided by the act some land of a value at least approximating somewhat the value of the lands they yield. Where can such lands be found? Not in Mississippi or Florida or Wisconsin, the only States east of the Mississippi River in which there are any public lands of any consequence at all, for the reason that in Mississippi and Florida the only remaining public lands of any value at all are timbered lands, and this bill will not permit the selection of timber lands in lieu of those relinquished by the holders of the railroad title.

The situation is even worse in Wisconsin, it being generally understood that there are practically no public lands excepting timber lands in that State. The same is especially true of that portion of Minnesota lying east of the Mississippi River, for that is one of the oldest settled portions of that State. Consequently the limitation at one time suggested by the subcommittee of the House Committee on the Public Lands, if it had been adopted, would absolutely have defeated the beneficent purpose of the measure.

The amount of land involved in this legislation is quite inconsiderable, being only about 8,000 acres, but represents the holdings of practically 100 families in Alabama, or, counting a family as consisting of five persons, about 500 people in my State will be affected by this relief legislation. The amount of 8,000 acres, scattered over the several public-land States, would be so inconsiderable in respect of any single State as to be hardly noticeable.

It is pertinent just here to inquire what are the precedents for this form of remedial legislation? The act of February 24, 1905, of which the present bill is amendatory, contained no restrictions upon the location of the exchange rights thereunder, and no evil consequences have resulted therefrom, even though the amount of land therein involved was greater in quantity by at least 2,000 acres than is affected by the present bill. The cases of four of the homesteaders under the present bill are identically similar to the cases provided for by the act of February 24, 1905.

I have taken the pains to examine somewhat into the various scrip acts that have been passed by Congress since the foundation of the public-land system with the result that in but very few of them has there been any restriction as to the place where the lieu scrip could be located.

The act of March 3, 1903, was one of these restrictive acts, and, as has been seen, this act has proven ineffective for the purposes for which it was intended.

The act of February 17, 1815, for the benefit of the sufferers from the New Madrid earthquake, in Missouri, gave them the right of lieu selection of any of the public lands in the then Territory of Missouri, which at that time embraced all of the Louisiana purchase north of the southern line of the present State of Missouri and extended to the western limits of the United States as then existent.

The scrip, known as "Chippewa scrip," issued under the provisions of the treaty with the Chippewas of October 2, 1863, which was only a very limited amount, was restricted in its location to lands within the district ceded by that treaty; but even that scrip might be located on both surveyed and unsurveyed lands, nor was there any restriction prohibiting the taking of timbered lands.

Lieu selections granted to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company under the act of August 5, 1892, were authorized to be made by the company of any lands in any State into or through which that company then had a line of road; and that embraced all the States from and including Wisconsin and Minnesota on the east to the Pacific coast, through which the Great Northern road runs, including Oregon and Washington. Moreover, these lieu selections could be made of both surveyed and unsurveyed lands, and there was no prohibition against their taking timbered lands.

Lieu selections authorized by the act of July 1, 1898, in favor of the Northern Pacific Railway Company were permitted to be made in any of the States in which that company had a grant of lands; that is, from and including Minnesota on the east to Washington and Oregon on the west. These selections could also be made of timbered lands, and both surveyed and unsurveyed lands could also be taken thereunder.

In all other scrip acts, so far as I have discovered, some sixteen in number, there were no restrictions whatever as to where the scrip might be located.

In some of the acts—for instance, in the case of Valentine scrip and Sioux half-breed scrip—locations may still be made of either surveyed or unsurveyed lands; and this was the case also in the forest lieu act of June 4, 1897, the provision permitting the location of unsurveyed lands having been changed by the subsequent act of June 6, 1900, so that only surveyed public lands might be selected. But under that act timber lands might be taken.

When it is remembered that at the time the lieu selection acts in favor of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway and the Northern Pacific Railway were passed there had not been any withdrawals for irrigation purposes or for forest reservations, and no withdrawals of extensive tracts supposed but not known to contain coal, as is the case at the present time, and that both of those companies were authorized to take not only surveyed but unsurveyed lands, as well as timbered lands, while under the present bill the exchange rights of selection can not be made of any but surveyed and nontimbered lands, and that in none of the other restrictive scrip acts referred to was there any limitation forbidding the selection of timbered lands, it will then be readily perceived that the present proposed restriction of exchange right selections as proposed by the Committee on Public Lands is not hardly fair.

The very fact that in none of the other restrictive scrip acts was there any prohibition against taking timbered lands, coupled with the additional fact that much more land was involved in all of them than is involved in the pending bill and the further fact that the area of country within which those selections were permitted to be made was even much greater than that embraced in the proposed bill, taking into consideration the small amount of land that can be selected under this bill as passed by the Senate, all these things being considered, it is apparent that the committee's restriction of these selections to lands not exceeding 160 acres in any one section nor more than 320 acres of contiguous lands is invidious; but as we are in the closing hours of an expiring Congress, I am constrained to accept the amendment proposed by the committee, and I accordingly move its adoption.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. The titled failed, and this simply gives them an opportunity to select some other lands.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the United States have anything to say about where they shall select them?

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. This bill is prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, and gives these people the right——

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILEY of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

said lands shall at all times be under the supervision of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of the single-track railway authorized by this act shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owners of the said single-track railway and the several railroad companies, or any of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of said single-track railway herein authorized shall not be commenced in one year and completed within two years from the date of the approval hereof.

On motion of Mr. MACON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FOUNDATION FOR PROMOTION OF INDUSTRIAL PEACE.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 8303) to establish the foundation for the promotion of industrial peace, and ask that it be substituted for a similar House bill on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas Alfred Bernard Nobel, of the city of Stockholm, in the Kingdom of Sweden, having by his last will and testament provided that the residue of his estate shall constitute a fund the income from which shall be annually awarded in prizes to those persons who have during the year contributed most materially to benefit mankind, and having further provided that one share of said income shall be awarded to the person who shall have most or best promoted the fraternity of nations and the abolishment or diminution of standing armies and the formation and increase of peace congresses; and

Whereas the Norwegian Parliament having, under the terms of said foundation, elected a committee for the distribution of the peace prize, and this committee having in the year 1906 awarded the aforesaid prize to Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, for his services in behalf of the peace of the world; and

Whereas the President desiring that this award shall form the nucleus of a fund the income of which shall be expended for bringing together in conference at the city of Washington, especially during the sessions of Congress, representatives of labor and capital for the purpose of discussing industrial problems, with the view of arriving at a better understanding between employers and employees, and thus promoting industrial peace: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and their successors in office, together with a representative of labor and a representative of capital and two persons to represent the general public, to be appointed by the President of the United States, are hereby created trustees of an establishment by the name of the Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace, with authority to receive the Nobel peace prize awarded to the President and by him devoted to this foundation, and to administer it in accordance with the purposes herein defined. Any vacancies occurring in the number of trustees shall be filled in like manner by appointment by the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the trustees herein mentioned to invest and reinvest the principal of this foundation, to receive any additions which may come to it by gift, bequest, or devise, and to invest and reinvest the same; and to pay over the income from the foundation and its additions, or such part thereof as they may from time to time apportion, to a committee of nine persons, to be known as "The industrial peace committee," to be selected by the trustees, three members of which committee shall serve for the period of one year, three members for the period of two years, and three members for the period of three years; three members of this committee to be representatives of labor, three to be representatives of capital, each chosen for distinguished services in the industrial world in promoting righteous industrial peace, and three members to represent the general public. Any vacancies which may occur in this committee shall be filled by selection and appointment in the manner prescribed for the original appointment of the committee, and when the committee has first been fully selected and appointed each member thereafter appointed shall serve for a period of three years or the unexpired portion of such term.

SEC. 3. That the industrial peace committee herein constituted shall arrange for an annual conference in the city of Washington, D. C., of representatives of labor and capital for the purpose of discussing industrial problems, with the view of arriving at a better understanding between employers and employees; it shall call special conferences in case of great industrial crises and at such other times as may be deemed advisable, and take such other steps as in its discretion will promote the general purposes of the foundation; subject, however, to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the trustees. The committee shall receive suggestions for the subjects to be discussed at the annual or other conferences and be charged with the conduct of the proceedings at such conferences. The committee shall also arrange for the publication of the results of the annual and special conferences.

SEC. 4. That all expenditures authorized by the trustees shall be paid exclusively from the accrued income and not from the principal of the foundation.

SEC. 5. That the trustees herein named are authorized to hold real and personal estate in the District of Columbia to an amount not exceeding $3,000,000, and to use and dispose of the same for the purposes of this foundation.

SEC. 6. That the principal office of the foundation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but offices may be maintained and meetings of the trustees and committees may be held in other places, to be provided for in by-laws to be adopted from time to time by the trustees, for the proper execution of the purposes of the foundation.

SEC. 7. That the Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace is hereby authorized and empowered, at its discretion, to cooperate with any institutions or societies having similar or like purposes.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect immediately on its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask if this bill contemplates any charge on the Treasury?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. None whatever.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman from Missouri see any way under this bill that will give a hole in which to stick a peg hereafter to ask the Government of the United States for money?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If there is, I do not see it, Mr. Speaker. The foundation is to be created by a gift from the President of the United States, to which other philanthropists of the country may add at their pleasure from time to time, and the expense of the meetings between representatives of capital and labor are to be defrayed out of that private fund.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTHOLDT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 25605) on the Calendar was laid on the table.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT ARISING UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13605) on the Speaker's table, an act to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be disagreed to, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. As this bill was reported in the Senate it contained two items—one of Pearl Mullett, and one relating to claims arising out of pelagic sealing—which are very objectionable. I wish to ask the gentleman whether they are among the Senate amendments now before the House?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, both of those items were stricken out in the Senate. Neither of them is in the bill.

Mr. MANN. And the items in the Senate all relate to matters in connection with the Navy?

Mr. MILLER. All relate to matters in connection with the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and announces the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. MILLER, Mr. WALDO, and Mr. BEALL of Texas.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution, in the nature of a telegram, of the legislature of the State of Washington; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of joint resolution adopted this date by the Washington State legislature, Washington State senate joint resolution No. 5, by Senator Piper:

Whereas an international exposition to be known as the "Alaskan-Yukon Pacific Exposition" will be held at the city of Seattle, Wash., from June 1 to October 15, 1909.

Whereas the primary purposes of said exposition are: (1) To demonstrate the vast and constantly increasing importance of the commerce of the Pacific Ocean countries in North America, South America, Asia, and Oceania. (2) To bring to the notice of the world the resources and potentialities of the Alaska and Yukon territories of the United States and the Dominion of Canada. (3) To demonstrate the marvelous progress of western America.

Whereas all lines of American manufacture and production would be vastly benefited by enlarged trade relations between the United States and the Pacific Ocean countries, as markets which now buy little or nothing from us would be opened to our commodities; our dealings with Pacific Ocean customers, particularly with those living in Asia and Oceania, would be facilitated if our operators possessed more intimate knowledge of economic conditions in the Pacific Ocean countries, the lack of which knowledge has been emphasized in the consular reports of the United States covering a long period of years;

Whereas the territory of Alaska, if supplied with adequate rail transportation and developed to the same degree that Finland is, would support through agriculture alone a population of 5,000,000;

Whereas no exposition has ever been held in the United States having for one of its main objects the promotion of Pacific commerce and the advancement of the trade of the United States with Pacific Ocean countries;

RIGHT OF ASYLUM IN ANOTHER STATE.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, in behalf of a number of labor organizations of the country, including some in my own State, representing, I understand, 2,000,000 citizens, I present sundry petitions praying that an investigation be made by Congress into the alleged kidnaping of three citizens of Colorado and their transfer to the State of Idaho.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CARMACK. If it be in order in this connection, I should like to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the dissenting opinion of Associate Justice McKenna in that case.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator if he would object to having both the opinion of the court and the dissenting opinion printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CARMACK. I have none. I do not make that request. The Senator can make it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the dissenting opinion be printed, I suggest, in fairness to the court, that the court's opinion should be printed with it.

Mr. CARMACK. I have no objection to it in the world.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the opinion of the court and the dissenting opinion will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FRYE. The request was made that the opinion of the court should also be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so put the question.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Supreme Court of the United States. No. 249. October term, 1906. George A. Pettibone, appellant, v. Jasper C. Nichols, sheriff. Appeal from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Idaho. December 3, 1906.]

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Idaho refusing, upon habeas corpus, to discharge the appellant who alleged that he was held in custody by the sheriff of Canyon County, in that State, in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

It appears that on the 12th day of February, 1906, a criminal complaint verified by the oath of the prosecuting attorney of that county and charging Pettibone with having murdered Frank Steunenberg at Caldwell, Idaho, on the 30th day of December, 1905, was filed in the office of the probate judge. Thereupon, a warrant of arrest based upon that complaint having been issued, application was made to the governor of Idaho for a requisition upon the governor of Colorado (in which State the accused was alleged then to be) for the arrest of Pettibone and his delivery to the agent of Idaho, to be conveyed to the latter State and there dealt with in accordance with law. The papers on which the governor of Idaho based his requisition distinctly charged that Pettibone was in that State at the time Steunenberg was murdered and was a fugitive from its justice.

A requisition by the governor of Idaho was accordingly issued and was duly honored by the governor of Colorado, who issued a warrant commanding the arrest of Pettibone and his delivery to the authorized agent of Idaho, to be conveyed to the latter State. Pettibone was arrested under that warrant and carried to Idaho by its agent and was there delivered by order of the probate judge into the custody of the warden of the State penitentiary, the jail of the county being deemed at that time an unfit place.

On the 23d day of February, 1906, Pettibone sued out a writ of habeas corpus from the supreme court of Idaho. The warden made a return, stating the circumstances under which the accused came into his custody and also that the charge against Pettibone was then under investigation by the grand jury. To this return the accused made an answer embodying the same matters as were alleged in the application for the writ of habeas corpus and charging, in substance, that his presence in Idaho had been procured by connivance, conspiracy, and fraud on the part of the executive officers of Idaho and that his detention was in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of the act of Congress relating to fugitives from justice.

Subsequently, March 7, 1906, the grand jury returned an indictment against Pettibone, William D. Haywood, Charles H. Moyer, and John L. Simpkins, charging them with the murder of Steunenberg on the 30th of December, 1905, at Caldwell, Idaho. Having been arrested and being in custody under that indictment, the officer holding Pettibone made an amended return stating the fact of the above indictment and that he was then held under a bench warrant based thereon.

At the hearing before the supreme court of the State the officers having Pettibone in custody moved to strike from the answer of the accused all allegations relating to the manner and method of obtaining his presence within the State. That motion was sustained March 12, 1906, and the prisoner was remanded to await his trial under the above indictment. The supreme court of Idaho held the action of the governor of Colorado to be at least quasi judicial and in effect a determination that Pettibone was charged with the commission of a crime in the latter State and was a fugitive from its justice; that after the prisoner came within the jurisdiction of the demanding State he could not raise in its courts the question whether he was or had been as a matter of fact a fugitive from the justice of that State; that the courts of Idaho had no jurisdiction to inquire into the acts or motives of the executive of the State delivering the prisoner; that "one who commits a crime against the laws of a State, whether committed by him while in person on its soil or absent in a foreign jurisdiction and acting through some other agency or medium, has no vested right of asylum in a sister State," and the fact "that a wrong is committed against him in the manner or method pursued in subjecting his person to the jurisdiction of the complaining State and that such wrong is redressible either in the civil or criminal courts can constitute no legal or just reason why he himself should not answer the charge against him when brought before the proper tribunal." (Ex parte Pettibone, 85 Pac., 902; Ex parte Moyer, 85 ib., 897.)

From the judgment of the supreme court of Idaho a writ of error was prosecuted to this court. That case is No. 265 on the docket of the present term, but the record has not been printed. But the parties agree that the same questions are presented on this appeal as arise in that case, and as this case is one of urgency in the affairs of a State we have acceded to the request that they may be argued and determined on this appeal.

On the 15th of March, 1906, after the final judgment in the supreme court of Idaho, Pettibone made application to the circuit court of the United States sitting in Idaho for a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that he was restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of Canyon County in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States. As was done in the supreme court of Idaho, the accused set out numerous facts and circumstances which, he contended, showed that his personal presence in Idaho was secured by fraud and connivance on the part of the executive officers and agents of both Idaho and Colorado, in violation of the constitutional and statutory provisions relating to fugitives from justice. Consequently, it was argued, the court in Idaho did not acquire jurisdiction over his person. The officer having Pettibone in custody made return to the writ that he then held the accused under the bench warrant issued against him. It was stipulated that the application for the writ of habeas corpus might be taken as his answer to the return. Subsequently, on motion, that answer was stricken out by the circuit court as immaterial, the writ of habeas corpus was quashed, and Pettibone was remanded to the custody of the State.

As the application for the writ of habeas corpus was, by stipulation of the parties, taken as the answer of the accused to the return of the officer holding him in custody, and as that answer was stricken out by the court below as immaterial, we must, on this appeal, regard as true all the facts sufficiently alleged in the application which, in a legal sense, bear upon the question whether the detention of the accused by the State authorities was in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States.

That application is too lengthy to be incorporated at large in this opinion. It is sufficient to say that its allegations present the case of a conspiracy between the governors of Idaho and Colorado and the respective officers and agents of those States to have the accused taken from Colorado to Idaho under such circumstances and in such way as would deprive him, while in Colorado, of the privilege of invoking the jurisdiction of the courts there for his protection against wrongful deportation from the State—it being alleged that the governor of Idaho, the prosecuting attorney of Canyon County, and the private counsel who advised them well knew all the time that "he was not in the State of Idaho on the 30th day of December, 1905, nor at any time near that date." The application also alleged that the accused "is not and was not a fugitive from justice; that he was not present in the State of Idaho when the alleged crime was alleged to have been committed, nor for months prior thereto, nor thereafter, until brought into the State as aforesaid."

In the forefront of this case is the fact that the appellant is held in actual custody for trial under an indictment in one of the courts of Idaho for the crime of murder charged to have been committed in that State against its laws, and it is the purpose of the State to try the question of his guilt or innocence of that charge.

Undoubtedly, the circuit court had jurisdiction to discharge the appellant from the custody of the State authorities if their exercise of jurisdiction over his person would be in violation of any rights secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States. But that court had a discretion as to the time and mode in which, by the exercise of such power, it would by its process obstruct or delay a criminal prosecution in the State court. The duty of a Federal court to interfere on habeas corpus for the protection of one alleged to be restrained of his liberty in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States must often be controlled by the special circumstances of the case, and unless in some emergency demanding prompt action, the party held in custody by a State and seeking to be enlarged will be left to stand his trial in the State court, which, it will be assumed, will enforce—as it has the power to do equally with a court of the United States (Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S., 624, 637)—any right secured by the supreme law of the land. "When the State court," this court has said, "shall have finally acted upon the case, the circuit court has still a discretion whether, under all the circumstances then existing, the accused if convicted shall be put to his writ of error from the highest court of the State, or whether it will proceed, by writ of habeas corpus, summarily to determine whether the petitioner is restrained of his liberty in violation of the Constitution of the United States." (Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S., 241, 251–253.) To the same effect are numerous cases in this court, among which may be named Ex parte Fonda, 117 United States, 516; New York v. Eno, 155 United States, 89, 93; Cook v. Hart, 146 United States, 183, 192; Minnesota v. Brundage, 180 United States, 499, 501; Reid v. Jones, 187 United States, 153; Riggins v. United States, 199 United States 547, 549. This rule firmly established for the guidance of the courts of the United States is applicable here, although it appears that the supreme court of Idaho has already decided some of the questions now raised. But the question of Pettibone's guilt of the crime of having murdered Steunenberg has not, however, been finally determined and can not be except by a trial under the laws and in the courts of Idaho. If he should be acquitted by the jury, then no question will remain as to a violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States by the methods adopted to secure his personal presence within the State of Idaho.

The appellant, however, contends that the principle settled in Ex parte Royall and other like cases can have application only where the State has legally acquired jurisdiction over the person of the accused, and can not apply when, as is alleged to be the case here, his presence in Idaho was obtained by fraud and by a violation of rights guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of the United States. Under such circumstances, it is contended, no jurisdiction could legally attach for the purpose of trying the accused under the indictment for murder.

In support of this view we have been referred to that clause of the Constitution of the United States providing that if "a person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime." (Article IV, section 2.) Also to section 5278 of the Revised Statutes, in which it is provided that "whenever the executive authority of any State or Territory demands any person as a fugitive from justice of the executive authority of any State or Territory to which such person has fled, and produces a copy of an indictment found or an affidavit made before a magistrate of any State or Territory, charging the person demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the State or Territory from whence the person so charged has fled, it shall be the duty of the executive authority of the State or Territory to which such person has fled to cause him to be arrested and secured, and to cause notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear. If no such agent appears within six months from the time of the arrest the prisoner may be discharged. All costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive to the State or Territory making such demand shall be paid by such State or Territory."

Looking, first, at what was alleged to have occurred in the State of Colorado touching the arrest of the petitioner and his deportation from that State, we do not perceive that anything done there, however, hastily or inconsiderately done, can be adjudged to be in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States. We pass by both as immaterial and inappropriate any consideration of the motives that induced the action of the governor of Colorado. This court will not inquire as to the motives which guided the chief magistrate of a State when executing the functions of his office. Manifestly, whatever authority may have been conferred upon the governor of Colorado by the constitution or laws of his State, he was not required, indeed, was not authorized, by the Constitution or laws of the United States to have the petitioner arrested unless within the meaning of such Constitution and laws he was a fugitive from the justice of Idaho. Therefore he would not have violated his duty if it had been made a condition of surrendering the petitioner that evidence be furnished that he was a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. Upon the governor of Colorado rested the responsibility of determining, in some proper mode, what the fact was. But he was not obliged to demand proof of such fact by evidence apart from the requisition papers. As those papers showed that the accused was regularly charged by indictment with the crime of murder committed in Idaho and was a fugitive from its justice, the governor of Colorado was entitled to accept such papers, coming as they did from the governor of another State, as prima facie sufficient for a warrant of arrest. His failure to require independent proof of the fact that petitioner was a fugitive from justice can not be regarded as an infringement of any right of the petitioner under the Constitution or laws of the United States. (Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S., 642, 652, 653.) In Munsey v. Clough (196 U. S., 364, 372) this court said that the issuing of a warrant of arrest by the governor of the surrendering State, "with or without a recital therein that the person demanded is a fugitive from justice, must be regarded as sufficient to justify the removal, until the presumption in favor of the legality and regularity of the warrant in overthrown by contrary proof in a legal proceeding to review the action of the governor. (Roberts v. Reilly, supra; Hyatt v. Cockran, 188 U. S., 691. See also In re Keller, 28 Fed. Rep., 681, 686.)

But the petitioner contends that his arrest and deportation from Colorado was, by fraud and connivance, so arranged and carried out as to deprive him of an opportunity to prove before the governor of that State that he was not a fugitive from justice, as well as opportunity to appeal to some court in Colorado to prevent his illegal deportation from its territory. If we should assume upon the present record that the facts are as alleged, it is not perceived that they make a case of the violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States. It is true, as contended by the petitioner, that if he was not a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the Constitution no warrant for his arrest could have been properly or legally issued by the governor of Colorado. It is equally true that, even after the issuing of such a warrant, before his deportation from Colorado, it was competent for a court, Federal or State, sitting in that State to inquire whether he was in fact a fugitive from justice, and if found not to be to discharge him from the custody of the Idaho agent and prevent his deportation from Colorado. (Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S., 624, 639; Ex parte Reggel, supra; Hyatt v. Cockran, 188 U. S., 691, 719; Munsey v. Clough, 196 U. S., 364, 374.) But it was not shown by proof before the governor of Colorado that the petitioner, alleged in the requisition papers to be a fugitive from justice, was not one, nor was the jurisdiction of any court sitting in that State invoked to prevent his being taken out of the State and carried to Idaho. That he had no reasonable opportunity to present these facts before being taken from Colorado constitutes no legal reason why he should be discharged from the custody of the Idaho authorities. No obligation was imposed by the Constitution or laws of the United States upon the agent of Idaho to so time the arrest of the petitioner and so conduct his deportation from Colorado as to afford him a convenient opportunity before some judicial tribunal sitting in Colorado to test the question whether he was a fugitive from justice and as such liable, under the act of Congress, to be conveyed to Idaho for trial there. In England, in the case of one arrested for the purpose of deporting him to another country, it is provided that there shall be no surrender of the accused to the demanding country until after the expiration of a specified time from the arrest, during which period the prisoner has an opportunity to institute habeas corpus proceedings. (Extradition act of 1870, 33 and 34 Vict., ch. 52, sec. 11; 2 Butler on the Treaty-Making Power, sec. 436; 1 Moore on Extradition, 741, 742.) There is no similar act of Congress in respect of a person arrested in one of the States of the Union as a fugitive from the justice of another State. The speediness, therefore, with which the Idaho agent removed the accused from Colorado can not be urged as a violation of a constitutional right and constitutes no legal reason for discharging him from the custody of the State of Idaho.

We come now to inquire whether the petitioner was entitled to his discharge upon making proof in the circuit court of the United States, sitting in Idaho, that he was brought into that State as a fugitive from justice when he was not, in fact, such a fugitive. Of course it can not be contended that the circuit court, sitting in Idaho, could rightfully discharge the petitioner upon proof simply that he did not commit the crime of murder charged against him. His guilt or innocence of that charge is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Idaho State court. The constitutional and statutory provisions referred to were based upon the theory that, as between the States, the proper place for the inquiry into the question of the guilt or innocence of an alleged fugitive from justice is in the courts of the State where the offense is charged to have been committed. The question therefore in the court below was not whether the accused was guilty or innocent, but whether the Idaho court could properly be prevented from proceeding in the trial of that issue, upon proof being made in the circuit court of the United States, sitting in that State, that the petitioner was not a fugitive from justice and not liable, in virtue of the Constitution and laws of the United States, to arrest in Colorado under the warrant of its governor and carried into Idaho. As the petitioner is within the jurisdiction of Idaho, and is held by its authorities for trial, are the particular methods by which he was brought within her limits at all material in the proceeding by habeas corpus?

It is contended by the State that this question was determined in its favor by the former decisions of this court. This is controverted by the petitioner, and we must therefore, and particularly because of the unusual character of this case and the importance of the questions involved, see what this court has heretofore adjudged.

In Ker v. Illinois (119 U. S., 436), it appeared that at the trial in an Illinois court of a person charged with having committed a crime against the laws of that State, the accused sought by plea in abatement to defeat the jurisdiction of the court upon the ground that, in violation of law, he had been seized in Peru and forcibly brought against his will into the United States and delivered to the authorities of Illinois; all of which the accused contended was in violation not only of due process of law as guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment, but of the treaty between the United States and Peru negotiated in 1870 and proclaimed in 1874. One of the articles of that treaty bound the contracting countries, upon a requisition by either country, to deliver up to justice persons who, being accused or convicted of certain named crimes committed within the jurisdiction of the requiring party, should seek an asylum or should be found within the territories of the other, the fact of the commission being so established "as that the laws of the country in which the fugitive or the person so accused shall be found would justify his or her apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime had been there committed." (18 Stat., 719, 720.) The plea stated, among other things, that the defendant protested against his arrest and was refused opportunity from the time of his being seized in Peru until he was delivered to the authorities of Illinois of communicating with any person or seeking any advice or assistance in regard to procuring his release by legal process or otherwise.

The court overruled the plea of abatement, and the trial in the State court proceeded, resulting in a verdict of guilty. The judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of Illinois, and this court affirmed, upon writ of error, the judgment of the latter court. It was held by the unanimous judgment of this court that, so far as any question of Federal right was involved, no error was committed by the State court, and that, notwithstanding the illegal methods pursued in bringing the accused within the jurisdiction of Illinois, his trial in the State court did not involve a violation of the due process clause of the Constitution nor any article in the treaty with Peru, although the case was a clear one "of kidnaping within the dominion of Peru, without any pretense of authority under the treaty or from the Government of the United States." The principle upon which the judgment rested was that, when a criminal is brought or is in fact within the jurisdiction and custody of a State, charged with a crime against its laws, the State may, so far as the Constitution and laws of the United States are concerned, proceed against him for that crime, and need not inquire as to the particular methods employed to bring him into the State. The case, the court said, "does not stand, when the party is in court and required to plead to an indictment, as it would have stood upon a writ of habeas corpus in California, or in any State through which he was carried in the progress of the extradition, to test the authority by which he was held." In meeting the contention that the accused, Ker, by virtue of the treaty with Peru, acquired by his residence a right of asylum, this court said: "There is no language in this treaty, or in any other treaty made by this country on the subject of extradition, of which we are aware, which says in terms that a party fleeing from the United States to escape punishment for crime becomes thereby entitled to an asylum in the country to which he has fled; indeed, the absurdity of such a proposition would at once prevent the making of a treaty of that kind. * * * It is idle, therefore, to claim that, either by express terms or by implication, there is given to a fugitive from justice in one of these countries any right to remain and reside in the other; and if the right of asylum means anything, it must mean this. The right of the Government of Peru voluntarily to give a party in Ker's condition an asylum in that country is quite a different thing from the right in him to demand and insist upon security in such an asylum. The treaty, so far as it regulates the right of asylum at all, is intended to limit this right in the case of one who is proved to be a criminal fleeing from justice, so that, on proper demand and proceedings had therein, the government of the country of the asylum shall deliver him up to the country where the crime was committed. And to this extent, and to this alone, the treaty does regulate or impose a restriction upon the right of the government of the country of the asylum to protect the criminal from removal therefrom. * * * We think it very clear, therefore, that, in invoking the jurisdiction of this court upon the ground that the prisoner was denied a right conferred upon him by a treaty of the United States, he has failed to establish the existence of any such right."

If Ker, by virtue of the treaty with Peru, and because of his forcible and illegal abduction from that country, did not acquire an exemption from the criminal process of the courts of Illinois, whose laws he had violated, it is difficult to see how Pettibone acquired, by virtue of the Constitution and laws of the United States, an exemption from prosecution by the State of Idaho, which has custody of his person.

An instructive case on this subject is Mahon v. Justice (127 U. S., 700). The governor of Kentucky made a requisition upon the governor of West Virginia for Mahon, who was charged with the crime of murder in Kentucky, and was alleged to have fled from its jurisdiction and taken refuge in West Virginia. While the two governors were in correspondence on the subject a body of armed men, without warrant or other legal process, arrested Mahon in West Virginia, and by force and against his will conveyed him out of West Virginia and delivered him to the jailor of Pike County, Ky., in the courts of which he stood indicted for murder. Thereupon the governor of West Virginia, on behalf of that State, applied to the district court of the United States for the Kentucky district for a writ of habeas corpus and his return to the jurisdiction of West Virginia. This court, after observing that the States of the Union were not absolutely sovereign and could not declare war or authorize reprisals on other States, and that their ability to prevent the forcible abduction of persons from their territory consists solely in their power to punish all violations of their criminal laws committed within it, whether by their own citizens or by citizens of other States, said: "If such violators have escaped from the jurisdiction of the State invaded, their surrender can be secured upon proper demand on the executive of the State to which they have fled. The surrender of the fugitives in such cases to the State whose laws have been violated is the only aid provided by the laws of the United States for the punishment of depredations and violence committed in one State by intruders and lawless bands from another State. The offenses committed by such parties are against the State; and the laws of the United States merely provide the means by which their presence can be secured in case they have fled from its justice. No mode is provided by which a person unlawfully abducted from one State to another can be restored to the State from which he was taken if held upon any process of law for offenses against the State to which he has been carried. If not thus held, he can, like any other person wrongfully deprived of his liberty, obtain his release on habeas corpus.

"Whether Congress might not provide for the compulsory restoration to the State of parties wrongfully abducted from its territory upon application of the parties, or of the State, and whether such provision would not greatly tend to the public peace along the borders of the several States, are not matters for present consideration. It is sufficient now that no means for such redress through the courts of the United States have as yet been provided. The abduction of Mahon by Phillips and his aids was made, as appears from the return of the respondent to the writ, and from the findings of the court below, without any warrant or authority from the governor of West Virginia. It is true that Phillips was appointed by the governor of Kentucky as agent of the State to receive Mahon upon his surrender on the requisition; but no surrender having been made, the arrest of Mahon and his abduction from the State were lawless and indefensible acts, for which Phillips and his aids may justly be punished under the laws of West Virginia. The process emanating from the governor of Kentucky furnished no ground for charging any complicity on the part of that State in the wrong done to the State of West Virginia." Again: "It is true, also, that the accused had the right while in West Virginia of insisting that he should not be surrendered to the governor of Kentucky by the governor of West Virginia, except in pursuance of the acts of Congress, and that he was entitled to release from any arrest in that State not made in accordance with them; but having been subsequently arrested in Kentucky under the writs issued on the indictments against him, the question is not as to the validity of the proceeding in West Virginia, but as to the legality of his detention in Kentucky. There is no comity between the States by which a person held upon an indictment for a criminal offense in one State can be turned over to the authorities of another, though abducted from the latter. If there were any such comity, its enforcement would not be a matter within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States. By comity nothing more is meant than that courtesy on the part of one State by which within her territory the laws of another State are recognized and enforced, or another State is assisted in the execution of her laws. From its nature the courts of the United States can not compel its exercise when it is refused; it is admissible only upon the consent of the State and when consistent with her own interests and policy. (Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 589; Story's Conflict of Law, § 30.) The only question, therefore, presented for our determination is whether a person indicted for a felony in one State, forcibly abducted from another State and brought to the State where he was indicted by parties acting without warrant or authority of law, is entitled under the Constitution or laws of the United States to release from detention under the indictment by reason of such forcible and unlawful abduction."

After a review of the authorities, including the case of Ker v. Illinois, above cited, the court concluded: "So in this case it is contended that, because under the Constitution and laws of the United States a fugitive from justice from one State to another can be surrendered to the State where the crime was committed, upon proper proceedings taken, he has the right of asylum in the State to which he has fled unless removed in conformity with such proceedings, and that this right can be enforced in the courts of the United States. But the plain answer to this contention is that the laws of the United States do not recognize any such right of asylum as is here claimed on the part of a fugitive from justice in any State to which he has fled; nor have they, as already stated, made any provision for the return of parties who by violence and without lawful authority have been abducted from a State. There is, therefore, no authority in the courts of the United States to act upon any such alleged right. In Ker v. Illinois the court said that the question of how far the forcible seizure of the defendant in another country and his conveyance by violence, force, or fraud to this country could be made available to resist trial in the State court for the offense charged upon him was one which it did not feel called upon to decide, for in that transaction it did not see that the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States guaranteed to him any protection. So in his case we say that, whatever effect may be given by the State court to the illegal mode in which the defendant was brought from another State, no right secured under the Constitution or laws of the United States was violated by his arrest in Kentucky, and imprisonment there, upon the indictments found against him for murder in that State."

These principles determine the present case and require an affirmance of the judgment of the circuit court. It is true the decision in the Mahon case was by a divided court, but its authority is none the less controlling. The principle upon which it rests has been several times recognized and reaffirmed by this court and is no longer to be questioned. It was held in Cook v. Hart, 146 United States, 183, 192, that the cases of Ker v. Illinois and Mahon v. Justice established these propositions: "1. That this court will not interfere to relieve persons who have been arrested and taken by violence from the territory of one State to that of another, where they are held under process legally issued from the courts of the latter State. 2. That the question of the applicability of this doctrine to a particular case is as much within the province of a State court as a question of common law or of the law of nations, as it is of the courts of the United States;" in Lascelles v.

Georgia, 148 United States, 537, 543, that it was settled in the Ker and Mahon cases that, "except in the case of a fugitive surrended by a foreign government, there is nothing in the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States which exempts an offender, brought before the courts of a State for an offense against its laws, from trial and punishment, even though brought from another State by unlawful violence or by abuse of legal process;" and in Adams v. New York, 192 United States, 585, 596 (the same cases being referred to), that "if a person is brought within the jurisdiction of one State from another or from a foreign country by the unlawful use of force, which would render the officer liable to a civil action or in a criminal proceeding because of the forcible abduction, such fact would not prevent the trial of the person thus abducted in the State wherein he had committed an offense." See also In re Johnson, 167 United States, 120, 127, in which the court recognized the principle that when a party in a civil suit has, by some trick or device, been brought within the jurisdiction of a court, he may have the process served upon him set aside, but that a different rule prevails in criminal cases involving the public interests.

To the above citations we may add In re Moore (75 Fed. Rep., 821), in which it appeared or was alleged that one accused of crime against the laws of a State and in the custody of its authorities for trial was brought back from another State as a fugitive from justice by means of an extradition warrant procured by false affidavits. In his application to the circuit court of the United States for a writ of habeas corpus the petition stated facts and circumstances tending to show that he was not a fugitive from justice. The application was dismissed. After stating that the executive warrant issued by the surrendering State had performed its office and that the petitioner was not held in virtue of it, the court said: "His imprisonment is not illegal unless his extradition makes it so, and an illegal extradition is no greater violation of his rights of person than his forcible abduction. If a forcible abduction from another State and conveyance within the jurisdiction of the court holding him is no objection to his detention and trial for the offense charged, as held in Mahon v. Justice (127 U. S., 712) and in Ker v. Illinois (119 U. S., 437), no more is the objection allowed if the abduction has been accomplished under the forms of law. The conclusion is the same in each case. The act complained of does not relate to the restraint from which the petitioner seeks to be relieved, but to the means by which he was brought within the jurisdiction of the court under whose process he is held. It is settled that a party is not excused from answering to the State whose laws he has violated because violence has been done him in bringing him within the State. Moreover, if any injury was done in this case in issuing the requisition upon the State of Washington without grounds therefor, the injury was not to the petitioner, but to that State whose jurisdiction was imposed upon by what was done. The United States do not recognize any right of asylum in the State where a party charged with a crime committed in another State is found, nor have they made any provision for the return of parties who, by violence and without lawful authority, have been abducted from a State, and whatever effect may be given by a State court to the illegal mode in which a defendant is brought from another State no right secured under the Constitution and laws of the United States is violated by his arrest and imprisonment for crimes committed in the State into which he is brought. (Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S., 715.)"

The principle announced in the Mahon and other cases above cited was not a new one. It has been distinctly recognized in the courts of England and in many States of the Union. In Ex parte Scott (9 B. & C., 446; 17 E. C. L., 204; 1829) one accused of crime against the laws of England, and who was in custody for trial, sought to be discharged upon habeas corpus because she had been improperly apprehended in a foreign country. Lord Tenterden, C. J., said: "The question, therefore, is this, whether if a person charged with a crime is found in this country it is the duty of the court to take care that such a party shall be amenable to justice or whether we are to consider the circumstances under which she was brought here. I thought, and still continue to think, that we can not inquire into them. If the act complained of were done against the law of a foreign country that country might have vindicated its own law. If it gave her a right of action, she may sue upon it." Some of the American cases, to the same general effect, are cited in Mahon v. Justice, namely, State v. Smith, 1 Bailey, South Carolina, 283; State v. Brewster, 7 Vermont, 118; State v. Ross, 21 Iowa, 467. See also Dow's case, 18 Pennsylvania State, 37; State v. Kealy, 89 Iowa, 94, 97; Ex parte Barker, 87 Alabama, 4, 8; People v. Pratt, 78 California, 345, 349; Church on Habeas Corpus, section 483, and authorities cited in notes, and note to Fetter's case, 57 American Decisions, 389, 400.

It is said that the present case is distinguishable from the Mahon case in the fact that the illegal abduction complained of in the latter was by persons who neither acted nor assumed to act under the authority of the State into the custody of whose authorities they delivered Mahon; whereas in this case it is alleged that Idaho secured the presence of Pettibone within its limits through a conspiracy on the part of its governor and other officers. This difference in the cases is not, we think, of any consequence as to the principle involved; for the question now is—and such was the fundamental question in Mahon's case—whether a circuit court of the United States, when asked upon habeas corpus to discharge a person held in actual custody by a State for trial in one of its courts under an indictment charging a crime against its laws, can properly take into account the methods whereby the State obtained such custody. That question was determined in the negative in the Ker and Mahon cases. It was there adjudged that in such a case neither the Constitution nor laws of the United States entitled the person so held to be discharged from custody and allowed to depart from the State. If, as suggested, the application of these principles may be attended by mischievious consequences, involving the personal safety of individuals within the limits of the respective States, the remedy is with the lawmaking department of the Government. Congress has long been informed by judicial decisions as to the state of the law upon this general subject.

In this connection it may be well to say that we have not overlooked the allegation that the governor and other officers of Idaho well knew at the time the requisition was made upon the governor of Colorado that Pettibone was not in Idaho on December 30, 1905, nor at any time near that date, and had the purpose in all they did to evade the constitutional and statutory provisions relating to fugitives from justice. To say nothing of the impropriety of any such facts being made the subject of judicial inquiry in a Federal court, the issue thus attempted to be presented was wholly immaterial. Even were it conceded, for the purposes of this case, that the governor of Idaho wrongfully issued his requisition, and that the governor of Colorado erred in honoring it and in issuing his warrant of arrest, the vital fact remains that Pettibone is held by Idaho in actual custody for trial under an indictment charging him with crime against its laws, and he seeks the aid of the circuit court to relieve him from custody, so that he may leave that State, and thereby defeat the prosecution against him without a trial. In the present case it is not necessary to go behind the indictment and inquire as to how it happened that he came within reach of the process of the Idaho court in which the indictment is pending. And any investigation as to the motives which induced the action taken by the governors of Idaho and Colorado would, as already suggested, be improper as well as irrelevant to the real question to be now determined. It must be conclusively presumed that those officers proceeded throughout this affair with no evil purpose and with no other motive than to enforce the law.

We perceive no error in the action of the circuit court, and its final order is affirmed.

[Supreme Court of the United States. No. 249.—October term, 1906. George A. Pettibone, appellant, v. Jasper C. Nichols, sheriff. Appeal from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Idaho. December 3, 1906.]

Mr. Justice McKenna dissenting.

I am constrained to dissent from the opinion and judgment of the court. The principle announced, as I understand it, is that "a circuit court of the United States, when asked upon habeas corpus to discharge a person held in actual custody by a State for trial in one of its courts under an indictment charging a crime against its laws, can not properly take into account the methods whereby the State obtained such custody." In other words, and to illuminate the principle by the light of the facts in this case—facts, I mean, as alleged, and which we must assume to be true for the purpose of our discussion—that the officers of one State may falsely represent that a person was personally present in the State and committed a crime there, and had fled from its justice, may arrest such person and take him from another State, the officers of the latter knowing of the false accusation and conniving in and aiding its purpose, thereby depriving him of an opportunity to appeal to the courts, and that such person can not invoke the rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution and statutes of the United States in the State to which he is taken. And this, it is said, is supported by the cases of Ker v. Illinois (119 U. S., 436), and Mahon v. Justice (127 U. S., 700). These cases, extreme as they are, do not justify, in my judgment, the conclusion deduced from them. In neither case was the State the actor in the wrongs that brought within its confines the accused person. In the case at bar, the States, through their officers, are the offenders. They, by an illegal exertion of power, deprived the accused of a constitutional right. The distinction is important to be observed. It finds expression in Mahon v. Justice. But it does not need emphasizing. Kidnaping is a crime, pure and simple. It is difficult to accomplish, hazardous at every step. All the officers of the law are supposed to be on guard against it. All of the officers of the law may be invoked against it. But how is it when the law becomes the kidnaper, when the officers of the law, using the forms and exerting its power, become abductors? This is not a distinction without a difference—another form of the crime of kidnaping distinguished only from that committed by an individual by circumstances. If a State may say to one within her borders and upon whom her process is served, "I will not inquire how you came here; I must execute my laws and remit you to proceedings against those who have wronged you," may she so plead against her own offenses? May she claim that by mere physical presence within her borders an accused person is within her jurisdiction denuded of his constitutional rights, though he has been brought there by her violence? And constitutional rights the accused in this case certainly did have, and valuable ones.

The foundation of extradition between the States is that the accused should be a fugitive from justice from the demanding State, and he may challenge the fact by habeas corpus immediately upon his arrest. If he refute the fact he can not be removed. (Hyatt v. Corkran, 198 U. S., 691.) And the right to resist removal is not a right of asylum. To call it so in the State where the accused is is misleading. It is the right to be free from molestation. It is the right of personal liberty in its most complete sense. And this right was vindicated in Hyatt v. Corkran, and the fiction of a constructive presence in a State and a constructive flight from a constructive presence rejected. This decision illustrates at once the value of the right and the value of the means to enforce the right. It is to be hoped that our criminal jurisprudence will not need for its efficient administration the destruction of either the right or the means to enforce it. The decision in the case at bar, as I view it, brings us perilously near both results. Is this exaggeration? What are the facts in the case at bar as alleged in the petition, and which it is conceded must be assumed to be true? The complaint, which was the foundation of the extradition proceedings, charged against the accused the crime of murder on the 30th of December, 1905, at Caldwell, in the county of Canyon, State of Idaho, by killing one Frank Steunenberg, by throwing an explosive bomb at and against his person. The accused avers in his petition that he had not been "in the State of Idaho, in any way, shape, or form, for a period of more than ten years" prior to the acts of which he complained, and that the governor of Idaho knew accused had not been in the State the day the murder was committed, "nor at any time near that day." A conspiracy is alleged between the governor of the State of Idaho and his advisers, and that the governor of the State of Colorado took part in the conspiracy, the purpose of which was "to avoid the Constitution of the United States and the act of Congress made in pursuance thereof, and to prevent the accused from asserting his constitutional right under clause 2, section 2, of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States and the act made pursuant thereof." The manner in which the alleged conspiracy had been executed was set out in detail. It was in effect that the agent of the State of Idaho arrived in Denver Thursday, February 15, 1906, but it was agreed between him and the officers of Colorado that the arrest of the accused should not be made until some time in the night of Saturday, after business hours—after the courts had closed and judges and lawyers had departed to their homes; that the arrest should be kept a secret and the body of the accused should be clandestinely hurried out of the State of Colorado with all possible speed, without the knowledge of his friends or his counsel; that he was at the usual place of business during Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, but no attempt was made to arrest him until 11.30 o'clock p. m. Saturday, when his house was surrounded and he arrested. Moyer was arrested under the same circumstances at 8.45, and he and accused "thrown into the county jail of the city and county of Denver."

It is further alleged that, in pursuance of the conspiracy, between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, February 18, the officers of the State and "certain armed guards, being a part of the forces of the militia of the State of Colorado," provided a special train for the purpose of forcibly removing him from the State of Colorado, and between said hours he was forcibly placed on said train and removed with all possible speed to the State of Idaho; that prior to his removal, and at all times after his incarceration in the jail at Denver he requested to be allowed to communicate with his friends and his counsel and his family and the privilege was absolutely denied him. The train, it is alleged, made no stop at any considerable station, but proceeded at great and unusual speed, and that he was accompanied by and surrounded with armed guards, members of the State militia of Colorado, under the orders and directions of the adjutant-general of the State.

I submit that the facts in this case are different in kind and transcend in consequences those in the cases of Ker v. Illinois and Mahon v. Justice, and differ from and transcend them as the power of a State transcends the power of an individual. No individual or individuals could have accomplished what the power of the two States accomplished; no individual or individuals could have commanded the means and success; could have made two arrests of prominent citizens by invading their homes; could have commanded the resources of jails, armed guards, and special trains; could have successfully timed all acts to prevent inquiry and judicial interference.

The accused, as soon as he could have done so, submitted his rights to the consideration of the courts. He could not have done so in Colorado; he could not have done so on the way from Colorado. At the first instant that the State of Idaho relaxed its restraining power he invoked the aid of habeas corpus successively of the supreme court of the State and of the circuit court of the United States. He should not have been dismissed from court, and the action of the circuit court in so doing should be reversed.

I also dissent in Nos. 250, 251, 265, 266, and 267.

HEZEKIAH DAVIS.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21091) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to enter on the roll of Capt. Orlando Humason's Company B, First Oregon Mounted Volunteers, the name of Hezekiah Davis, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. It is a short bill to correct a military record, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOBE HOLT.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16659) to correct the military record of Tobe Holt, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the committee was, to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable to any person by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

That Tobe Holt, alias Lewis Holt, be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from Company K, One hundred and tenth United States Colored Infantry, on May 6, 1864: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable to any person by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NATCHEZ ELECTRIC STREET RAILWAY AND POWER COMPANY.

Mr. WARREN. I report back without amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 19751) to authorize the Natchez Electric Street Railway and Power Company to construct and operate an electric railway along the national cemetery roadway at Natchez, Miss. I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] to the bill.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

REPAYMENT TO CERTAIN ENTRYMEN.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 22588) for the relief of homestead entrymen who have paid more than the lawful purchase money, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a short bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not think a report is necessary.

Mr. KEAN. Then an explanation is necessary.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Of course I know the deep interest the Senator from New Jersey has in all public-land questions, having once been a member of the Committee on Public Lands and having resigned from the committee. The bill has passed the House. It provides for the repayment to certain entrymen of the amount they paid in excess of what they were entitled to pay. There are probably not over a dozen instances in the country where three or four dollars or $10 is due to individuals. I do not think the bill is of sufficient importance to go over the cases, and certainly the committee did not think it of sufficient importance to present a written report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. I beg pardon; I do not object. I understand from the Senator from North Dakota that the bill covers only nine or ten cases.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And it is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. KEAN. I do not object to its consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15859) ceding certain lands to Colorado State Agricultural College, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—PANAMA RAILROAD.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to what occurred on yesterday in the consideration of the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Senator asked me a question with reference to a particular amendment, and in the haste of the moment I answered him that it was still in disagreement. That amendment was modified by the conferees and agreed to. So I made a mistake in my answer to the Senator from Texas. The modification is, I think, such as to be satisfactory to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], or, if not, it seemed satisfactory to the conferees at least. It is amendment No. 125, which provides for the transfer of certain balances so that the balances may be paid to the Panama Railroad Company.

Mr. CULBERSON. From what page of the RECORD does the Senator read?

Mr. ALLISON. It is on page 214 of the bill. It relates to an appropriation last year.

Mr. CULBERSON. On what page?

Mr. ALLISON. Page 214 of the last print. It is amendment No. 125.

Mr. CULBERSON. The copy of the bill that I have has only 198 pages.

Mr. ALLISON. I will hand the Senator a copy of the last print.

The appropriation last year was for $1,000,000, and it is found in the sundry civil act of that year. It reads as follows:

To continue the reequipment of the Panama Railroad, to be disbursed directly under the Isthmian Canal Commission, $1,000,000; no part of said sum shall have been so expended until the obligation of the Panama Railroad Company for the full amount thereof and drawing 4 per cent interest payable to the United States shall have been delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and by him accepted.

It is the transfer of the unexpended balance of this appropriation that is provided for in the sundry civil bill of this year, and it is amendment No. 125. The amendment provides that whatever balance there is of this sum may be paid to the Panama Railway Company on account of any indebtedness the Panama Canal Company may owe to the railway company. The whole question is a matter of bookkeeping, as the Government of the United States owns the railroad and of course the canal itself; but we have provided that this sum, whatever it is, shall receive the approval of the Canal Commission, and that the amounts on account of the reimbursement shall be audited as all other accounts of the Commission are audited. So it seems that the appropriation is protected by the provision that is in the bill as finally agreed to in conference.

Mr. CULBERSON. Did I understand the Senator correctly as saying that the change provided by the conferees is agreeable to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ALLISON. No; I did not say that, because I did not have an opportunity of communicating with the Senator from Alabama on the subject, nor did the conferees have an opportunity.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the Senator to say it was thought to be acceptable to the Senator from Alabama, or at least to the conferees.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not say that it was acceptable to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CULBERSON. Of course I accept the explanation of the Senator as to what he said.

Mr. ALLISON. At the moment yesterday I misapprehended the situation, as we had really first agreed to disagree upon that amendment, and then returned to it and one or two other amendments, and finally, with a modification, we agreed to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, there is nothing that I can say just now, nor until I have had an opportunity to confer with the Senator from Alabama about the matter, as he proposed the amendment and wrote a letter to the Committee on Appropriations with reference to it. I will endeavor, if it be practicable, to see him this morning or to communicate with him in some way so that if I think it proper to take any action in the matter it can be taken. I suppose nothing can be done except to move a reconsideration of the vote, which was taken under a misapprehension, at least so far as I am concerned. Necessarily the explanation of the Senator from Iowa is entirely satisfactory as to how the mistake occurred.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether the conference report can be reconsidered, it having been agreed to also by the House; but the amendment as now amended by the conferees can not be criticised by the Senator from Alabama, I think.

BELL FOR JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 236) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish metal for a bell, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to deliver to the Pocahontas Bell Association, if the same can be done without detriment to the public service, such condemned historic metal as he may deem proper, not to exceed 2,000 pounds in weight, to be used in casting a bell to be placed on the Virginia building at the Jamestown Exposition; but the Government shall be at no expense in connection with this gift.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETH DAVIS.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25801) granting an honorable discharge to Seth Davis to report it favorably without amendment. It is a short bill, and I ask for its present consideration. I submit a report to accompany the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that Seth Davis shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as first lieutenant Company E, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, on April 23, 1866, and that the Secretary of War shall issue to him an honorable discharge as of that date; but no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISIANA MOLASSES COMPANY, ETC.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 24833) for the relief of the Louisiana Molasses Company (Limited) and the Louisiana Distilling Company, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the vinegar factory of the Louisiana Molasses Company (Limited) and the distillery of the Louisiana Distilling Company, both situated in New Orleans, La., and having their respective premises separated from each other by a distance of only 425 feet in a direct line, may, to avoid special hardship to the proprietors of said premises, both continue to be operated as now situated and in like manner as they have been operated for seven and one-half years past in the belief that the premises were duly separated according to law, notwithstanding that the said premises are not distant from each other full 600 feet in a direct line, as required by the general statutes in that respect.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. I submit a conference report on the disagreeing votes upon the pension appropriation bill. I should like to call the attention of Senators to this report, as many of them seem to be considerably interested in the subject of which the report treats. I will explain it after it has been read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24640) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

P. J. McCUMBER,
N. B. SCOTT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WASHINGTON GARDNER,
W. P. BROWNLOW,
JOHN A. SULLIVAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the committee of conference has met several times. There has been no disagreement with reference to any amendment of the Senate except the amendment which reestablished the several pension agencies. Senators will remember that the House struck out all of the pension agencies from the bill except one—in other words, they abolished seventeen out of the eighteen pension agencies. The Senate amended the bill by reinstating all the pension agencies. In order to conform the bill to what was required, if we kept the other seventeen agencies, other amendments became necessary, all of which were adopted by the Senate. The amendment of the Senate reestablishing the seventeen agencies and amendments that bear directly upon that and perfect the legislation are the only amendments that are in controversy at present between the two Houses.

The report which the Committee on Pensions sent to the Senate some time ago clearly indicated, though in a very brief form, the reasons for reestablishing the several agencies. It may be said that the principal reason which governed in reestablishing them was that it was deemed practically for the best interest of the service that the disbursements should be made as near as possible to the place where the claimant under pension legislation resided, and in addition we deemed it wise that all branches of the Government, so far as practicable, might be conducted not necessarily at the capital, but at several points throughout the country, so that the people might thereby become acquainted with and be brought in closer relation to Government business.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator has stated that the pension agencies were to be reestablished. May I not inquire of him if he does not mean "continued" instead of "reestablished?"

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, I mean that, so far as the bill is concerned, the bill as it came from the House abolished seventeen agencies.

Mr. CARTER. Under existing law, should that provision of the bill be not enacted, the pension agencies would continue.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the provision placed in the bill by the House should not be adopted, the present pension agencies would continue.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. It is about another matter. I was informed by some one that the general pension law, as recently passed, in some way did not provide for certain Mexican-war pensioners, or rather that it was intended to cut out those of a certain class. The Senator from North Dakota told me, I think, that he expected to correct it in this bill. I wish to know if that was done.

Mr. McCUMBER. It was done. It is in the second amendment, on page 2 of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. There is no objection to that on the part of the House?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no objection whatever to that. The only question is upon the continuance of the appropriation for seventeen agencies, and we have agreed upon every matter but that one single proposition and those which are directly related to that proposition.

It has been estimated, Mr. President, that there will be a saving of from $100,000 to $150,000 by abolishing all of these agencies except one, and continuing that one in the city of Washington. I must say, after reading the testimony that has been given in this case and after receiving communication from the Department, taking into consideration the fact that we have greatly increased the labor of the Pension Bureau for the ensuing year, there will be no saving whatever in clerkships, and there will be simply the saving of $4,000 a year for each one of the seventeen agencies and $4,500 per year for rent necessary for the New York agency. I believe that the inconvenience to the veterans of the civil war will much more than balance the saving that will be attained by reason of abolishing the agencies.

Mr. President, if we were to have but a single disbursing agency, in my candid opinion we ought to place it as near the center of the soldier population in the United States as possible. It ought not to be in Washington. Chicago would certainly be a much better place for the convenience of all the ex-soldiers throughout the United States than the city of Washington.

It was suggested by the Commissioner of Pensions that we might cut the agencies down to nine. That was brought into the House with a favorable report. It was, however, amended in the House whereby all the agencies were abolished but one, with the idea that that agency would be continued at the city of Washington. There is no reason I know of why it should be continued at the city of Washington more than New York or Boston or Chicago or Knoxville or any other place near the center of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. LONG. I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. The agency in the United States paying the largest amount in pensions is one at Topeka, Kans.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LONG. Is that one of the agencies discontinued by the House bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Every one of the agencies is abolished by the House provision, with the exception of one, and that is to be at the city of Washington.

Mr. LONG. I understand the Commissioner of Pensions recommended the discontinuance of nine of these agencies.

Mr. McCUMBER. He did.

Mr. LONG. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to discuss the question except to say that I believe the Senate should insist upon its amendment and continue these agencies. The agency at Topeka, Kans., pays out the largest amount of any agency in the United States and should be continued. It is one of the nine agencies that the Commissioner of Pensions recommends should be continued. This agency should be continued for the convenience of the ex-soldiers of Kansas and adjoining States. The Senate should insist upon its amendment and thus continue all these agencies.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I heartily concur in the opinion just expressed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] as to the propriety of the conferees on the part of the Senate insisting that these agencies shall not be abolished or consolidated in one office in Washington. I have made some little investigation of what took place in the other branch of Congress at the time these amendments were adopted on the pension appropriation bill, and I confess that I fail to find any valid reason for the action that was taken to abolish all of the eighteen agencies except one.

Senators must remember that the establishment of these agencies was made a part of the law of the land after mature deliberation not only on the part of the Senate, but the House as well, and it was approved by the President many years ago. Under the law it is so arranged that the agencies are not fixed in any definite place, but they are arranged by the order of the Department so as to best subserve the interests of the ex-soldiers of the country who are pensioners under the law. It has been found during all the period we have had these agencies that they have worked well; and, as has just been stated by the Senator from Kansas, in order to facilitate the payment of pensions at Topeka, Kans., one was established there which has grown to be one of the largest in the United States. It is of great benefit to the old soldiers of the Middle West.

In my own State, at Chicago, we have a very large pension agency, which serves the interests, I should say, of from one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand soldiers, and it will be a great hardship upon all those pensioners, in my judgment, if that agency shall be abolished.

Mr. President, the Commissioner of Pensions did not recommend the provision that was adopted by the House. No authority in any of the Departments that has anything to do with the administration of this law has recommended any such provision as that which has been adopted by the House. It was one of those impulsive actions upon the part of that body which, it seems to me, has neither rhyme nor reason in its favor.

I certainly hope that the conferees on the part of the Senate, in the interest of the old soldiers of the country, will insist that this provision proposed by the other House shall go out of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will insist upon its amendment. I am satisfied, upon a careful investigation of this question that it will be found that no saving to the Government can be made by agreeing to the House proposition. In the city of Washington there are now paid 54,000 pensioners, which payment requires the services of twenty-four clerks. At Topeka are paid 115,000 pensioners, and thirty-nine clerks do the work. At Topeka as many as 13,000 vouchers have been paid in one day, while in the city of Washington, I am informed, that 3,000 per day is the record. If you consolidate these pension agencies, it will be necessary to have all the rolls at every agency of the United States copied and brought to Washington. The copying of those rolls will cost the Government at least $500,000.

At the present time rent is paid only in the city of New York; but if you bring the rolls here, you must rent buildings, and this alone, with the additional room required for the clerks to be hired to do the work will vastly increase the expense. To remove all the agencies from among the soldiers, will also cause a delay in the delivery of the pension checks to the pensioners, in some cases seven or eight days. That would be very undesirable to the old soldiers, and I hope the Senate will insist on its disagreement to the House proposition.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I want to emphasize what has just been so well said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. We have a pension agency in San Francisco, where there are a large number of clerks employed. We are 3,000 miles from the capital, and it would be imposing a great hardship and a great injustice upon those who are entitled to pensions to require them to wait until they can communicate with the Government here at Washington.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PERKINS. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to know, and I think other Senators would like to know, what excuse was given for this extraordinary and almost revolutionary provision of the other House for the wiping out of the pension agencies.

Mr. PERKINS. I presume the chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. MCCUMBER] can answer that question better than I, but it seems to me it is the result of a desire to centralize all authority here at the national capital. Certainly it is not in the interest of economy and it is not in the interest of the convenience of the old soldiers. Our pension agency is now in the public building in San Francisco, and the people of that great State and the soldiers there are thereby accommodated. To transfer that agency to Washington would impose an additional expense upon the Government without saving—taking it in an economical point of view—one dollar of the expense now required for the conduct of the business of that agency.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, answering the question of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], I desire to say that the claim of the other House, as shown by the arguments there, was that there would be some economy in the matter of disbursement as to these seventeen agencies, affording, of course, some economy in the matter of a few clerkships that would be saved by reason of this transfer of the work to the city of Washington.

Right here I want to call attention to one fact, and that is that under the present law the President of the United States may discontinue any of these agencies if he considers that the service will be benefited either from an economical standpoint or from any other standpoint by reason of diminishing their number.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions is it not a fact that no tabulated statement has been made as to what the expenses would be here as compared with the present expenses, where the eighteen pension agencies are operated, and that the contention that there will be an economy in that direction is simply a statement that is made without any facts being shown to sustain it?

Mr. MCCUMBER. The conferees on the part of the House based their claim for economy on these propositions: First, that there will be a saving of the salaries of seventeen agents, which amount to $4,000 a year each; and then they assume that it will reduce the clerkships to a certain extent. It is shown by the evidence that the pension agencies that disburse the larger amounts cost less per capita of soldiers to whom the disbursements are made, and therefore, by still further concentrating, it is contended we could make the cost of such disbursement still less.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions whether he favors this scheme of consolidation?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I do not.

Mr. CULLOM. I am glad of that.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I reported against it.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the chairman of the committee will continue to insist on the Senate amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the chairman of the committee when these pension agencies are proposed to be abolished by this House proposition?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Immediately.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope that that will not be done. I think, in view of the legislation we have passed at this session, granting additional service pensions, that it is not wise to so change the method of paying pensions as to entirely revolutionize the system. While it may be easy to show on paper that the situation is such that a single agency could be managed more economically than seventeen different agencies, I think it will be found that, if the agencies are all concentrated in the city of Washington, with the additional charges for rental, clerk hire, and all the surroundings of a great bureau here at Washington to pay pensions, it will in the end increase rather than diminish the cost.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the outlying agencies the salaries of clerks will average, I think, less than $900 a year, while the cost of clerk hire in the city of Washington for the same service will average more than $1,200 a year.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true. I am sure there is no economy in the proposed change.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the conferees on the part of the Senate on the pension appropriation bill have taken a very firm stand for sustaining the law as it now exists. I have given this matter considerable thought and I am satisfied that if the proposition of the House should prevail no economy would be brought about by the abolition of the various pension agencies outside of Washington. There might possibly be a very small saving, but certainly it would throw everything into confusion, and especially at this time when the new pension law we passed here a few weeks ago is just going into effect.

The Commissioner of Pensions told me that there were already between 75,000 and 100,000 applications for pensions under the law we have recently passed. We should not, therefore, change the places of paying the pensions and disarrange the business at this time. I have insisted with the conferees of the House that the matter should at least go over for a year, until we can see what will be the effect of the new law and how much additional work will be thrown on the different agencies in the payment of pensions in consequence of it.

I hope the Senate will stand by the conferees in the position they have taken on this question.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senate will do so, of course.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I have listened with more than common interest to the statements which have been made in the last few minutes in reference to the proposition of the other House; which seems to be not only extraordinary, but absurd. One statement, it seems to me, is sufficient to demolish the whole contention, and that is, Mr. President, that there are still nearly 1,000,000 of the old soldiers and their widows on the pension rolls of the Republic, scattered from ocean to ocean and from Mexico to the Dominion. The gentlemen who want to change the system and direct the whole administration of this department from Washington alone need not be in such great haste. It will not be very long until the years shall have completed this work; but there are still a million of these recipients of the Government's bounty and the Government's justice. So it appears that the proposition to take the pension agencies from their midst, where the pensions are paid to them directly, is not only an extraordinary act, but an absurd one, without the shadow of a reasonable excuse for it.

I hope that the Senate will unanimously stand by its conferees persistently in the position they have taken against the proposition which the House has advanced.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I earnestly hope that the Senate will sustain its conferees in the position they have taken respecting this matter. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] sounded the keynote of the situation when he said that to concentrate these agencies in the city of Washington would eventually result in greater expense than that which is now incurred by the various agencies scattered throughout the country.

We all know what it means to establish a bureau in the city of Washington. At first it may involve an insignificant sum, but it only requires a few years, Mr. President, for it to become a very elaborate and expensive affair. That is precisely, in my judgment, what would happen in this case if we should concentrate the various pension agencies here in the city of Washington.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the conferees on the part of the Senate will adhere to their present position. The attempt has been made to consolidate these pension agencies again and again, and after careful investigation every time the proposition has been decided against. I do not believe there is a pensioner in the United States of America who is in favor of the consolidation of these pension agencies and locating a bureau for the transaction of the business in the city of Washington. I hope the conferees will adhere to their position.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I believe I am as much in favor of economy as any Senator on this floor, but I do not believe that economy should be the only consideration in judging the merits of any measure that may be proposed. I agree with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, that we ought not to concentrate too much of administration in the city of Washington, and that wherever it can be performed elsewhere without injury to the public service it ought to be done.

I wish to express my opinion, furthermore, that if this measure were passed and the pension agencies were abolished, it would not result in any economy to the Government. The very moment these agencies were all concentrated in the city of Washington there would be a demand for increased salaries of clerks, and they would inevitably be increased by 33⅓ per cent, to put them on a level with the salaries of other clerks now in the city of Washington. I believe it would be best for the administration of our pension laws that the pension agencies should be retained.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have necessarily been absent from the Chamber and confess to not having a very correct idea of what has been going on this morning, but I assume from what I have heard that this is a discussion as to the desirability of abolishing the pension agencies in the country and putting the matter in the hands of one agent in the city of Washington. I want simply to say in reference to that that when the present agencies were established there were less than one-half as many pensioners in the country as there are to-day. So that, if there ever was need for these agencies, there is a greater need now for these agencies than there has been in the past, at least a much greater need than there was when they were established.

Again, Mr. President, our recent legislation is going to bring a very great amount of additional work for the pension agents of the country. I think 100,000 applications have come in under the act we recently passed, and it does seem to me that this is an inopportune time to make this proposed consolidation, whether it be claimed that it is in the interests of economy or for any other purpose.

I know that the old soldiers do not want this thing done, and I think we ought to take that matter into very serious consideration. I have here, Mr. President, a letter from the War Veterans and Sons' Association, with headquarters at Brooklyn, N. Y., which is a very strong presentation of the matter, and I will ask permission to place it in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR VETERANS AND SONS' ASSOCIATION,
ROOM 2, BOROUGH HALL,
Brooklyn, N. Y., February 6, 1907.

DEAR SIR AND COMRADE: At a regular meeting of the War Veterans and Sons' Association of the United States of America (Incorporated), held on February 6, 1907, at their headquarters, room 2, Borough Hall, the following resolutions were adopted and ordered sent to all Members of Congress and United States Senators, and all kindred organizations which have the interests of the veterans and their widows at heart, urging them to use their best endeavors to prevent the enacting of a bill presented in Congress having in view the abolition of the seventeen pension agencies, located in convenient sections of the United States, and centralizing the payment of pensions from one agency at Washington, D. C.; and

Whereas the sole reason for this proposed sweeping change is the possibility of an insignificant saving in the cost of disbursing the amount paid to pensioners which has been reduced to a minimum, being now less than 3½ mills per dollar; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the War Veterans and Sons of the United States of America hereby most earnestly protest against the abolishment of the pension agencies as now established. The present system is most satisfactory to the pensioners residing, as they do, within a radius of two or three hundred miles of the agency making the payment; enabling them to receive their payments within a few days after date on which they become due. Should the contemplated change occur, there must result delay in payments, causing unnecessary hardships and inconvenience to all pensioners, especially that type of men who may be classed the saviors of our glorious country, who defended the Government and the Constitution in the darkest days of its history, the veterans of the civil war; and be it further

Resolved, That we leave no stone unturned that will help to annul this injustice to our comrades who are on the pension roll.

P. S. M. MUNRO, President.
WILLIAM H. FAINTER, Secretary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust, Mr. President, that the conferees on the part of the Senate may stand firm in this matter, and that we may be permitted to continue this work as we have been doing in the past. If in the future, as this vanishing army of men who saved the country diminishes, it is deemed desirable to do this thing, then let it be done, but let it be done with greater deliberation and more consideration than the matter has received up to the present moment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire merely to add a word to what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I know that in my State and in all the region thereabouts the abolition of pension agencies would be a cause of great inconvenience and would be a real misfortune to the veterans who receive pensions. I see no good reason for abolishing the agencies at this time. The pensioners are growing old; they are accustomed to going to the agencies which are within easy reach of their homes, and to compel them to collect their pensions from Washington would put them not only to trouble, but to some expense. I do not believe any money would be saved in the long run by adopting the proposed change, and I am sure the old soldiers would suffer from it.

I only say this, Mr. President, because I hope the conferees will realize that the feeling of the Senate, or of many Senators at least, is very strong on this point, and that they are anxious that the conferees should stand firm on the Senate amendment, which I believe to be a thoroughly proper one.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, all the reasons advanced are good in themselves, but the one which I think more strongly emphasizes the importance of not changing this arrangement at this time is the fact that recently we have passed legislation which adds perhaps 100,000 pensioners to the pension roll. Already the Department is overwhelmed with applications. The men now engaged in the work at the established agencies are better able to care for it expeditiously and satisfactorily than new men in a new bureau could possibly do.

In order that the sentiment of the Senate may be properly tested, Mr. President, upon the matter, I move that the Senate recede from its amendment and that a vote be taken upon that motion. I shall vote against the motion, because I am for the proposition as represented in the Senate amendment, but, in order that the sentiment of the Senate may be tested, I make that motion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Should not the motion be that the Senate insist on its amendment?

Mr. DICK. My reply to that is that it seems to me that a vote on this motion would more thoroughly sound the sentiment of the Senate than would a motion put in any other form.

Mr. HEMENWAY obtained the floor.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me a word?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. A motion to adhere would not do; if the Senate voted to adhere that would kill the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to have a motion that will mean what we want to do. I believe in making such a motion as we want to see carried. I want to adhere to the position that the Senate has taken in regard to the matter, and I want to support the conferees. I do not care about the form of the motion, if it means what we want to vote to do. I want to add a word, Mr. President, of hearty sympathy——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Ohio change his motion——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I intended to discuss the motion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK], but I yielded to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. FORAKER. I only wanted to say what I had almost concluded saying when I was interrupted, that I am in hearty sympathy with all that has been said here in favor of retaining these agencies as they are now established. I am opposed to this everlasting concentration of everything in Washington. Let us have something as it has been heretofore, especially that which is popular and which the public demand seems to require. I hope the Senate conferees will maintain their position.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has expressed my thought. I see no reason why all of this work should be concentrated in Washington. The fact is, that salaries paid at the various agencies in the States are not as high as the salaries paid in Washington; living is not as high, and, from the standpoint of economy, there is nothing to be gained by the proposed change; but it will result in great detriment to those who are receiving pensions, delay in transmitting their checks, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, on just that point, I wish to say that out of ten clerks in the pension agency in New Hampshire seven are only receiving $60 a month. If this work were transferred to Washington, we know what would happen so far as expenditures are concerned.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am obliged to the Senator for calling attention to that fact. If the work were done in Washington, the salaries of the clerks would be at least $1,200 a year.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to have the Senator from Indiana state the exact question and the parliamentary form that it is in. Some of us upon this side have not been able to hear.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The motion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] was that the Senate recede from its amendment. That would simply take the sense of the Senate on that proposition.

Mr. KNOX. What is the exact proposition? That is what we want to know.

Mr. HEMENWAY. To recede from the amendment of the Senate. The House, as I understand, in the appropriation bill provided that all local pension agencies should be discontinued and that the business should be transacted in the city of Washington. The Senate amended that by striking out the provision. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions if that is not correct?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senate amended that by striking out the provision and leaving the agencies as they now exist. The motion of the Senator from Ohio would simply take the sense of the Senate on that proposition, and those believing that the agencies should be continued as they now exist would vote against his motion. A motion to further insist might be the proper motion.

Mr. CULLOM. In my judgment that would be the proper motion.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not know but that it would be the proper motion.

Mr. CULLOM. The proper motion is to further insist upon the Senate amendment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The proper motion would be to further insist upon the Senate amendment; and, with the permission of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK], I would move to amend his motion so that it will be that the Senate further insist on its amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, since it is my purpose to get the strongest possible expression of the Senate favorable to the contention of the Senate conferees, I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] and will change the form of the motion so as to make it that the Senate further insist upon its amendment, instead of receding.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest that we have a yea-and-nay vote on that motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think it has not been developed that other States than those having agencies within their borders are particularly interested in this matter. My State is in the California district, and so are Montana and Washington and the entire line of States on the Pacific coast.

Mr. PERKINS. And Oregon and Nevada.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and Oregon and Nevada. It is a very great convenience to pensioners within that Pacific coast district to have an agency in San Francisco, which is the center of the pension business in that region, and our pensioners receive their checks from that office. It is an agency that is not established upon such an expensive basis as that on which the Departments are run in Washington. If it is transferred to Washington, it would be placed upon the expensive basis upon which business of that kind is done in Washington, whereas if transacted at any agency it is comparatively an inexpensive proposition. Senators from the Pacific coast will undoubtedly join in resisting a change that would result in the abolition of our central agency for the distribution of pensions on the Pacific coast.

Mr. FRYE. Let us have a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate further insist upon its amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the question be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] that the Senate further insist upon its amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives. Upon that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I am sure he would vote "yea" if present. I would vote the same way. So I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). Although paired, I will vote on this question. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DEPEW. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. PLATT] is unavoidably absent. He sends me word that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WARNER. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to say in this connection—and I wish the announcement to stand for any other vote that may be taken to-day—that my colleague [Mr. NELSON] is detained at his home by sickness.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. BURROWS. My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is temporarily absent from the Chamber. If present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 1, as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator how much is involved in these claims.

Mr. FULTON. It would not be possible to say how much is involved. Of course the Senator understands that various bills have been referred to the committee, and it is simply proposed now to refer them to the Court of Claims for findings of fact, not for judgment.

Mr. ALLISON. Has there been any proposal to remove the statute of limitations?

Mr. FULTON. No, sir; the claims go to the Court of Claims simply for findings of fact. There are 150 church and school claims and about 300 other claims.

In the resolution, so far as I had control of it, I have endeavored to keep the number down to the lowest possible limit.

Nothing like the number of bills whose reference has been requested are proposed to be referred. There are somewhere between three and four hundred bills altogether in the resolution.

As a matter of policy I am frank to say I do not believe it is good policy to continue sending these bills to the Court of Claims. A vast number of bills known as "war claims" are sent there annually, and the Government is practically helpless. The proof is of such a character that the Government can not meet it.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. I will yield in just a second. But, nevertheless, the law provides for those bills being sent there, and so long as it is the law I do not see how the committee can refuse to report a resolution sending them there.

At the next session of Congress I intend to bring in an amendment modifying the fourteenth section of the Tucker Act, under which most of these claims are sent to the Court of Claims, so as to prohibit the sending to the Court of Claims of any more of these so-called "war claims." I believe it will be in the interest of good public policy to do that, and I believe it will meet the approval of the Members of Congress from the sections whence these claims arise. But the law now provides for their being sent to the Court of Claims, and so long as it is the law I see no way in which the committee can refuse to report a resolution.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon if he proposes to have the list of claims published? A number of Senators, including myself, desire to know what cases are referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. FULTON. The resolution will, of course, be published.

Mr. McCREARY. It will be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly. But if objection be taken to the consideration of the resolution, it can go over until some other time. It will be published, and each Senator and Representative can see it. I will say that I personally care nothing about the present consideration of the resolution. I do not care whether a single bill is referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the Senator have the resolution printed in the RECORD?

Mr. FULTON. It will be printed in the RECORD, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that an additional number of copies of the resolution be printed, because there will be great demand for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What additional number does the Senator suggest?

Mr. KEAN. Twice the usual number.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks that twice the usual number of copies of the resolution be printed. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WILLIAM N. BRUNSON.

Mr. McCUMBER. From the Committee on Pensions I report favorably a pension bill and ask for its immediate consideration. A bill for this beneficiary has heretofore passed, but the name was wrong, and the passage of this bill is necessary.

The bill (S. 8622) granting an increase of pension to William N. Brunson was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William N. Brunson, late of Company G, One hundred and fifty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BURKETT. From the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8614) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia," approved June 3, 1896, I report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 6 of the act referred to so as to read as follows:

SEC. 6. That each member of said boards of medical examiners of the District of Columbia shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take an oath to administer, fairly and impartially, the provisions of this act. Each board shall elect from its own members a president and a secretary. Each board shall hold a meeting for examination in the city of Washington on the second Tuesday in January, April, July, and October of each year, and continuing so long as may be necessary to examine all applicants, and other meetings shall be held at such times as the board of medical supervisors shall direct. Each of said boards shall examine, at the meeting immediately following the receipt of the proper certificates from the board of medical supervisors, all applicants for licenses to practice medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia so certified.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GERMAN BARK MARIECHEN.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25437) to grant American registry to the German bark Mariechen, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That in carrying out the resolution of the Senate of February 1, 1907, requesting the Secretary of State to furnish to the Senate a copy of all rules and regulations governing the Department, and the resolution of the Senate of February 28, 1907, ordering the printing of the report thus furnished as a Senate document, the following papers shall be omitted from such document:

1. The United States consular regulations;
2. Instructions to the diplomatic officers of the United States;
3. The register of the Department of State; and
4. The copy of the pamphlet giving the history and functions of the Department of State.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina submits a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to send to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public welfare, all papers and information in his possession in regard to the proposed letting of the contract for the construction of the Panama Canal, which was competed for by W. J. Oliver and others, and state the existing status.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to have read in connection with the resolution a brief extract from the New York Herald relating to this subject, which will explain the reasons, or some of the reasons, why I have offered it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. The usual formula is "if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. TILLMAN. Either way will be satisfactory to me. I tried to follow the usual phraseology.

Mr. SPOONER. One form presents an issue of fact, and the other submits it to his judgment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want the President to determine it.

Mr. SPOONER. He would, anyway.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to have the resolution read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to send to the Senate, if, in his judgment, not incompatible with the public welfare, all papers and information in his possession in regard to the proposed letting of the contract for the construction of the Panama Canal, which was competed for by W. J. Oliver and others, and state the existing status.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the article as requested by the Senator from South Carolina.

The Secretary read as follows:

[New York Herald, Friday, March 1, 1907.]

OLIVER DECLINES RETURN OF CHECK—ASTONISHES COMMISSION BY REFUSING TO TAKE BACK THE $200,000 AFTER REJECTION OF BIDS—TELLS A POKER STORY—ILLUSTRATES HOW HE FEELS BY RELATING THE EXPERIENCES OF A "CHUMP" IN A WESTERN GAME—SURPRISED BY MR. STEVENS—PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT SAID TO HAVE DECIDED TO MAKE PUBLIC RETIRING CHIEF ENGINEER'S STRANGE LETTERS.

All bids for the construction of the Panama Canal were formally rejected to-day by the Isthmian Commission, and Mr. Rogers, the Commission's general counsel, sent to William J. Oliver, of the Panama Construction Company, the lowest bidder, the check for $200,000 which he had put up as an evidence of good faith.

Mr. Rogers was greatly surprised when Mr. Oliver declined to receive the check, saying he would await the arrival here to-morrow of Judge Morgan J. O'Brien, of New York, and John B. McDonald, president of the company. Confident that the Panama Construction Company would receive the contract, these men went to Augusta, Ga., a few days ago to play golf.

Mr. Oliver is very angry at the treatment he has received from the Government. He called on Secretary Taft to-day to say he did not hold the Secretary in any way to blame for the decision reached by the President. When asked what he had to say about the outcome of his effort to get the contract, Mr. Oliver said:

LIKE A WESTERN POKER GAME.

"It reminds me of a game of poker once played out West. There is a chump in every game of poker, and the chump in this game got to a point where he held four aces. He got everyone into the pot and then showed his four aces and reached for the money.

"'Hold on,' said one of his opponents, 'I've got a whangdoodle.'

"'What's that?' asked the chump.

"'Look at that sign behind you.' said the other, and the chump looked and saw the sign: 'A whangdoodle beats anything.'

"He was cleaned out, but the others asked him to get more money and return to the game, which he did. Pretty soon he found in his hand a whangdoodle. He bet the limit and everbody came in. Finally the chump announced that he had a whangdoodle and reached for the money.

"'Just a moment,' interrupted the dealer. 'Look at that sign over your shoulder.' The chump looked, and this time the sign read: 'A whangdoodle can be played only once a night.'

"That's just about my position," added Mr. Oliver.

If Mr. Oliver follows his present inclination he will make a statement to-morrow which will ease his own mind, but not affect the result. He will then return to his own private business of railroad contracting.

COMMISSIONERS CONFIRMED.

Theodore P. Shonts, whose connection with the Government will be severed next Monday, when he becomes president of the Interborough-Metropolitan Company, in New York, was confirmed to-day by the Senate as chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and John F. Stevens, Gen. P. C. Hains, Rear-Admiral M. T. Endicott, Jackson Smith, B. M. Harrod, and Col. W. A. Gorgas as members.

Major Goethals, who is to be the new chairman of the Canal Commission, and Major Gaillard, who will be one of his chief assistants, will leave for the Isthmus on March 6.

The more facts that are learned about the letters received here from Chief Engineer John F. Stevens, who has just resigned, the greater becomes the amazement. It is asserted that in one letter he stated that if the Administration's present policy continued the Republican party would be defeated. Another story is that he disapproved of E. S. Benson, auditor of the Canal Commission, and desired his retirement, which officials here would not grant.

There was some talk among Senators to-day of introducing a resolution calling on the President to furnish to the Senate all papers and correspondence bearing upon the retirement of Mr. Stevens. When this became known at the White House, it is said, the President declared it was his purpose to make these letters public.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I propose to make only a few brief remarks on this question.

The Panama Canal is a very great work in which every good American is interested. All the people, without regard to section or party, want to have it constructed, and constructed as speedily as possible, and with as little scandal as possible.

There have been some remarkable transactions in connection with this great undertaking. Engineer Wallace, said to be one of the greatest engineers of the country, resigned. There were reports in the papers that his reasons for doing that were because he found his reputation would suffer if he continued his association with this work. A little later the country was startled by the statement that Mr. Shonts, the president of the Commission, was retaining the presidency of his railroad and did not find the work of building this great canal sufficient to employ all his time, but he could devote some of it to his own private affairs. Now comes Mr. Stevens's resignation. But I am going a little too fast.

It will be recalled that Mr. Wallace was soundly berated, reprimanded, I will say abused, by the Secretary of War for having deserted the firing line, as it were, in the face of the enemy; for having surrendered his position as engineer under circumstances little short of cowardice. Mr. Stevens, his successor, comes forward and in a very little while resigns, and these same sinister rumors are afloat to the effect that he found some things going wrong, and that the auditor's action in approving certain items, as I read between the lines in that statement in the Herald, caused Mr. Stevens to sever his connection with the canal.

There were reports rife in the country when the Panama Canal was begun and the change from the Nicaragua route was acted upon by Congress, that a very large part of the $40,000,000—I believe it was $40,000,000 that we paid to the French company for its franchises—was used as a bribery fund somewhere; I do not know where, I suppose nobody will ever find out. But it does seem that there is a great deal of smoke about the construction of this great work.

Here is Mr. Oliver. I know him personally. He has a reputation in the South, from whence he comes, although he is a northern man by birth, as being probably one of the best-equipped and most efficient contractors, not only in the United States, but in the world. He understands the art of organizing labor and controlling it and getting the maximum of work from it.

After those in control of the construction of the canal had notified the country that it was to be let to the lowest bidder under certain conditions, bids were opened, and Mr. Oliver's bid being by far the lowest, six and some hundredths per cent, while others were wanting to charge all the way from twelve to fifteen and twenty—the country fondly imagined that this efficient and able contractor and engineer would be employed, as he had a right to expect to be employed, in the construction of this great work, and that we would get the canal built as soon as possible and at a minimum of cost.

Well, at once hocus-pocus began to come into the game, or there were appearances of how not to do it. The newspapers have been full for the last month of what Mr. Oliver might expect or what he must do before he could expect anything. But, as I understand it, Mr. Oliver has complied with all of the conditions, one after the other, as they have been presented to him. He has turned off his first copartner, who was objectionable, and has secured the assistance and cooperation of responsible financiers, who are backing him. I may be a little suspicious—I confess that mysteries always excite my suspicion—but there has appeared to me to be a purpose to compel Mr. Oliver to let in some of the competitors who were too greedy in their first bids and to share this great work with them.

Now, all of this disappears, and we are informed of a new arrangement; but, of course, we do not know. The President alone can tell us whether or not any bid is to be received from anybody or whether the Government will proceed to construct the canal with the army engineers who have been recently assigned to this duty, and let them employ the labor and control it all and carry on the work as though they were the contractors.

I confess I have some curiosity to have some definite information, and therefore I offered the resolution, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is conceded, I believe, that——

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HOPKINS. I was going to say that I think the resolution ought to go over under the rule.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is too late to have it go over under the rule. It will go to the Calendar presently, at 2 o'clock, if the Senator will wait.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before it goes over I should like to make a brief statement.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a point of order.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution was only introduced this morning. It clearly goes over under the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule, it will go over if there is objection to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. There is objection.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to make a short statement.

Mr. HOPKINS. I rose for the purpose of making an objection, but I will reserve it until the Senator from Texas concludes, with the understanding that my objection will then be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I was proceeding to say that it is conceded, I think, by the experts that the possibility, the probability, or the feasibility of successfully constructing the canal rests upon the dam at Gatun. The evidence shows so far that in the borings no rock at Gatun has been discovered, but there is what is called indurated clay, which some of the authorities believe to be a sufficient substitute for rock basis.

That question was to a degree inquired into by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, of which I am a member, and to the extent that it was then developed I will say frankly it seemed to be satisfactory. Since then, however, I notice in the public press that there is still doubt as to whether a dam at Gatun is feasible, and that this matter will be determined sometime this year after a personal examination is made at Panama by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. I therefore suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to add to his resolution that the President be requested, if not in his judgment incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate the official correspondence with reference to this extremely important matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is all I have to say. I yield the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to say to the Senator from Texas that after those suggestions were published in the newspapers, the chief engineer sent a dispatch saying that there was nothing to it, and that further investigations had simply confirmed the earlier reports that the foundation is ample at Gatun.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have already stated that the inquiry made by the committee appeared to be satisfactory, there being correspondence with the chief engineer of the organization, but since then I notice that there is a proposition to examine further into the question by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOPKINS. My understanding is that the chief engineer, Mr. Stevens, had his attention called to what has already been stated by the Senator from Texas, and that he reported that further investigations made at Gatun simply confirmed the judgment that was originally entertained, that the foundations are ample to sustain the dam which it is proposed to construct at that point.

Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may go over under the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

Mr. CARMACK. I beg the Senator to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well.

Mr. LODGE and others. Regular order!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee rise to morning business?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir; I wish to say just a word upon the resolution offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me for morning business for a moment?

Mr. CARMACK. I shall occupy only three minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to say, Mr. President, that I had prepared a resolution of the same character as that offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I think it better, however, that it should come from the Senator from South Carolina than from me, because he will be here, as I will not, to take part in the subsequent proceedings in this matter, if there should be any.

I merely wish to say that it seems to me Mr. Oliver has received very harsh and unjust measure from this Administration. He is a contractor who stands for ability second to no other contractor in the United States or in the world. He made the lowest bid. He complied with every condition that was required of him. He made all the proper organization. He made all the financial arrangements. He expended about $35,000 or $40,000 of his own money in doing so; and then at the last he has his bid rejected for no good reason, so far as the public knows.

I hope, therefore, that the resolution of the Senator from South Carolina will be adopted.

WILLIAM N. BRONSON.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (S. 7822) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to William N. Bronson."

NICHOLAS M. HAWKINS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (S. 5623) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Nicholas M. Hawkins."

TRAFFIC BY EXPRESS COMPANIES.

Mr. BURKETT. If the morning business is closed, I desire to call up a resolution on the table that went over yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. I call attention to the fact that the morning hour has expired.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, but the Senator from Nebraska is recognized to present a request to the Senate. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. KEAN. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska may be now called up. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BURKETT. It is a resolution for information, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go over.

Mr. BURKETT. It has come over from yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would have been laid before the Senate before the morning hour closed had the opportunity occurred.

Mr. KEAN. I thought it was a resolution ordering an investigation.

Mr. BURKETT. It calls for some information from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KEAN. But we have nothing from the Interstate Commerce Commission to show that they have any funds on hand to conduct the investigation.

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator will just withhold the objection a minute, I will explain briefly the object of the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to give attention to this resolution because it is of enough importance, it seems to me.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the resolution been read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution was read yesterday. It has not been read to-day.

Mr. ALDRICH. Reading yesterday, I suggest, does not give the Senate any information now. I ask that it be read, subject to objection. It can be taken up by unanimous consent, I suppose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It can be taken up by unanimous consent or on motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. BURKETT, as follows:

Whereas on January 4, 1907, at Kansas City, Mo., the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association, in convention assembled, charged that the American Express Company, Adams Express Company, United States Express Company, Pacific Express Company, and Wells-Fargo Express Company are unlawfully engaged, especially in the West, in the business of buying, selling, and handling on consignment fruit, vegetables, and oysters, thus coming into direct competition with merchants and jobbers engaged in such business; that no such business is contemplated or sanctioned in their articles of incorporation, but is contrary to and in violation of the powers legally conferred upon them; that the trafficking in merchandise which they transport is an illegitimate business for express companies to engage in, and is destructive of the legitimate business of fruit jobbers and produce merchants; that it gives opportunity for covering up discriminations, the payment of rebates, and unlawful practices, and that said express companies have increased and are increasing their charges for the transportation of fruits, produce, and other merchandise to an unreasonable extent, to the detriment of growers, shippers, and consumers; and

Whereas the said Western Fruit Jobbers' Association, at the time and place mentioned, by resolutions duly adopted, not only condemned and denounced as injurious and unlawful the contest for business between express companies and merchants engaged in legitimate trade in fruit, produce, and oysters, but demanded that a vigorous and rigorous examination and investigation of the methods and practices adopted and in use by said express companies be instituted by Federal authority, to the end that accurate information may be obtained, abuses and discriminations corrected, and unlawful business prohibited: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to inquire, investigate, and report to the Senate—

First. Whether the American Express Company, Adams Express Company, United States Express Company, Pacific Express Company, and Wells-Fargo Express Company, or either of them, are unlawfully engaged, through their local or other agents, in the business of buying, selling, or handling on consignment fruits, vegetables, and oysters entering into interstate commerce.

Second. Whether such business is contemplated or sanctioned by the articles of incorporation of said express companies.

Third. Whether such business is carried on in violation of the provisions of the act to regulate interstate commerce.

Fourth. Whether the carrying on of such business by said express companies is inimical to or destructive of the legitimate business of fruit and produce merchants and gives an unfair advantage to the agents of said express companies, which is used by them to the disadvantage and detriment of legitimate shippers and receivers of fruit and produce.

Fifth. Whether the carrying on of such business gives to said express companies an opportunity to cover up discriminations, to pay rebates, and engage in other unlawful practices.

Sixth. Whether said express companies have increased and are increasing their charges for the transportation of fruits, produce, and other merchandise to an unreasonable extent, to the detriment of growers, shippers, receivers, and consumers of such fruits, produce, and other merchandise.

Seventh. That the Interstate Commerce Commission be required to make the investigation at its earliest possible convenience and to report the facts and its conclusions thereon, together with its recommendations, as soon as it can be done, consistent with the performance of its public duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I feel constrained to interpose an objection to the further consideration of the resolution. I would not object to a resolution instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to report the facts, but they are not a court of law and can not tell whether these practices are unlawful. Certainly the Senate ought not to adopt the preamble without any knowledge whatever. I would not object to a plain resolution to inquire as to the facts, but I must object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask the Senator to withhold his objection a moment and perhaps we can amend it. I want to get at the facts. I will say to the Senator that this is a very important matter. The law of last year is being violated it seems in this way, and if the resolution is improper——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BURKETT. I yield for a question.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator why complaints have not been made as contemplated by law and prosecutions instituted under existing statutory regulations?

Mr. BURKETT. I wish to explain the resolution, and when I get through I will answer any questions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. LODGE. I think the messages from the House ought to be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask if the Senator is going to object to my explaining briefly the object of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Nebraska to make an explanation? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I try not to introduce any resolution here where the inquiry is not a proper one, and if this resolution is not in proper form I want the Senate to amend it. As it is drawn up it may be very improper in form, but the facts are what I am after. All over the country the complaint is being made by producers and shippers and by commission merchants that the express companies are going into the business of selling and buying commodities and produce.

The producers have taken up the matter, and they have protested to the express companies. The express companies have curtly replied to them that there is nothing to be done in the matter; but they admit, as I shall show, that they do the business. In this I contend that they are violating the intent and purpose of the law that we passed last winter.

When the charge was first made it appeared to me to be very ridiculous, and I ask the attention of those Senators who are objecting to the resolution. I realize that if anything comes up in this body that looks toward the correcting of any particular abuses, there is always somebody who is alarmed about it. I am not going to run away with the railroads or the express companies, but I do know that the people of this country are entitled to some consideration in a matter of this kind. I simply want to present the matter to the Senate.

When the charges were made that the express companies were going out and buying orchards in some localities and putting the products of that community into the market and then putting a rate over another community so high that that community could not possibly get its apples or products into that market, it occurred to me, as I said, to be a ridiculous proposition that any express company or any other transportation company should be so shortsighted, after all the trouble these transportation companies have had and that Congress has had to adjust this matter of transportation. And I may say for a long time I could not believe that that thing was possible. It seemed to me so wholly aside from their business that I could not believe it.

But the other day this letter came to me, signed by the superintendent of the Adams Express Company. It is addressed to the secretary of the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association. Let me say that last spring, at Kansas City, when the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association met they passed the resolutions, in substance, that are recited in the preamble of this resolution, saying that the express companies were buying poultry, apples, and all sorts of products and handling them; buying them and selling them to the detriment of the producers and consumers and the commission merchants. Now, let me read just a few lines from the letter that I referred to of Mr. Zimmerman, the superintendent of the Adams Express Company, in his reply to this secretary urging them to desist from this sort of business.

> Other express companies go into the business regularly, buying and selling. Are you moving against them as strenuously as you are against us in proportion to the competition with your association as represented by the methods of this company and others?

Now, Mr. President, I have here another important matter that I want to read in part. It is a card sent out by the American Express Company. Note what it says:

> American Express Company's order and commission department purchases or obtains any article for patrons at any place where the company has an agency, in the United States, Canada, or Europe, etc.

I have here a card sent out by the Pacific Express Company, and it says:

> Prices quoted below are on first-class goods and from local dealers, who are constant shippers of express.

And then quotes the prices of dressed poultry, live poultry, and butter, etc.

I have here also a document sent out by the American Express Company quoting prices of all sorts of produce. I do not want to detain the Senate very long, and I am not going into this matter in detail unless it shall come up for consideration properly; but I desire to present some of the facts, that the Senate may know the importance of the resolution.

I have here from the Wells-Fargo Express Company a price list sent out of oysters of all kinds, and also telling where they can get all kinds of oysters, to which agent to send, for this kind of oysters and the other.

I have in my hand also a circular which the Senate can see [exhibiting], a price list of four pages of various kinds of products in the country, by the American Express Company. I desire to read just a little from it to show what character of business they are doing.

> Agents of this company should familiarize themselves and comply with the following instructions:
> "Through our order and commission department we aim to find a market for the producer and shipper and a supply for the dealer, and by applying a few of your efforts through this department you can increase the earnings of your office to a large degree."

Now, let me call the attention of the Senate to what I have here—proof that they hire these agents and give them a commission on the business they do, and instruct them to buy orchards and sell apples. I have one letter here showing how they make a special rate, for example, from a town in Texas to a town in Iowa. It was a cheaper rate than they gave from a nearer town in Texas, because they bought the orchards in the vicinity of that one town.

Now, notice further—

> These price lists are issued and mailed at intervals from office of the traffic department, and are worthy of your careful attention and prompt action.

Notice a little further. This is the circular letter written by the traffic and commission department to the agents of the United States Express Company—

> See that your dealers receive a list of our quotations at earliest convenience, solicit their orders, and forward same to agent at shipping point.

A little further on it says:

> Any printed matter desired by our agents to increase their business through this department will be printed for them upon receipt of a copy of what is wanted.

A little further on it says:

> For further instructions, apply to superintendent of traffic.

Now, here in this same circular we find the following:

OYSTER SEASON IS OPEN.

Below we give the names of a few shipping points. Our agents there will receive your orders.

Now, notice—

Baltimore, Md.; Annapolis, Md.; Loreley, Md.; New York City, Greatkills, N. Y.

And other places.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdrew my objection to this resolution on the statement of the Senator from Nebraska that he desired to make a short explanation. It strikes me that he is discussing the merits of this proposition at some length; and I suggest that that discussion be postponed until we get the resolution properly before the Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. Let me just close in a few words. I wanted to show the necessity of this resolution with a view that the Senate might consent to go on and perfect the resolution if it needed it and send it to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am willing to perfect it now, if the Senator will permit—perfect it by striking out the preamble and all the resolutions except the first one, and making it read as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to inquire, investigate, and report to the Senate—

First. Whether the American Express Company, Adams Express Company, United States Express Company, Pacific Express Company, and Wells-Fargo Express Company, or either of them, are engaged—

Not "unlawfully engaged," for that is a judicial question—through their local or other agents, in the business of buying, selling, or handling on consignment fruits, vegetables, and oysters entering into interstate commerce.

That is all there is of this proposition, except verbiage. I am willing that the resolution which I have just read shall pass, and, so far as I am concerned, I am willing that it shall pass now.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, let the resolution be put in the form suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island. Certainly the preamble should go out. There is no question about that. The Senator is correct in that respect.

Mr. CLAPP. While the resolution is being amended, I ask the Vice-President to lay before the Senate a communication which is now on the table received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have been trying for an hour and a half to secure the attention of the Chair to present morning business.

Mr. ALDRICH. Morning business has closed.

Mr. LODGE. Morning business has closed; the time for it has expired.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Chair has not announced that morning business has closed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas rise to morning business?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator later.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, morning business closed at 1 o'clock.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

Mr. BURKETT. Is there——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have been trying to introduce a resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is out of order pending the calling of the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich | Culberson | Kean | Pettus |
| Ankeny | Daniel | Latimer | Piles |
| Bacon | Dick | Lodge | Rayner |
| Berry | Dillingham | Long | Scott |
| Beveridge | Dubois | McCreary | Smith |
| Brandegee | Du Pont | McCumber | Spooner |
| Bulkeley | Elkins | McLaurin | Sutherland |
| Burkett | Flint | Mallory | Teller |
| Burnham | Foraker | Millard | Tillman |
| Carmack | Frazier | Nixon | Warner |
| Carter | Frye | Overman | Warren |
| Clapp | Gallinger | Patterson | Wetmore |
| Clark, Mont. | Hale | Penrose | Whyte |
| Clay | Hemenway | Perkins | |

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Is there objection made to further——

Mr. BURKETT. I think, Mr. President, I now have the resolution in a form in which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] will agree to it.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask, Mr. President, that the message from the House——

Mr. BURKETT. I had the floor, had I not, Mr. President? I had asked unanimous consent to make some remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood, and recognized the Senator from Nebraska to do so.

Mr. BURKETT. And I can not be taken off the floor, can I, by an objection?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no interest in this thing one way or the other; but here are Senators in the last forty-eight hours of the session waiting with conference reports and asking to call up House messages. It is now twenty-five minutes past the morning hour, and it seems to me the immediate business of the Senate is to transact business which is pending between the Houses. That is the only interest I have in it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska occupies the floor by unanimous consent; the Senator from New Hampshire took the floor upon a message from the House of Representatives, but yielded for morning business only. The Senator from Nebraska occupies the floor subject to the right of the Senator from New Hampshire to resume it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the message from the House of Representatives relating to the ship-subsidy bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. CLAY. I rise to a question of privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia rises to a question of privilege, which he will state.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to present the credentials of my colleague [Mr. BACON] as a Senator from the State of Georgia for the term commencing March 4 next, and I ask that they be read and properly filed.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, before we get by this, I desire to move to take up the resolution I have offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] rose nearly an hour ago to call up a House message and withdrew his request that the message be laid before the Senate in order that morning business might be presented.

Mr. BURKETT. What is the business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a message from the House of Representatives. The Senator from Georgia now presents a privileged matter, which is the credentials of his colleague.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the credentials be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. FORAKER. I object, Mr. President. I hope that will not be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the Secretary will read the credentials.

The Secretary read the credentials, as follows:

STATE OF GEORGIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, ATLANTA.

I, Joseph M. Terrell, governor of the State of Georgia, by virtue of the authority in me vested by subdivision 2 of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, by reason of a vacancy happening from the expiration of the term of Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON as United States Senator from the State of Georgia on the 3d day of March, 1907, and during the recess of the legislature of said State, do hereby make temporary appointment of AUGUSTUS O. BACON, of Macon, Bibb County, Ga., who is duly qualified therefor under the Constitution of the United States, to be a Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Georgia from the 4th day of March, 1907, until the next meeting of the legislature, in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State of Georgia to be affixed at Atlanta, the capital, this 1st day of March, 1907.

[SEAL.] JOSEPH M. TERRELL, Governor.

By the governor:

PHILIP COOK,
Secretary of State.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the credentials be placed on file.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be filed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives in regard to the ship-subsidy bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 529) to promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to promote commerce; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce," approved March 3, 1891, be, and hereby is, amended by adding thereto the following section:

"SEC. 10. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts for a term of ten years, with citizens of the United States, for the carrying of mails on steamships hereafter built and registered in the United States, by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof, a majority of the stock of which shall be and shall continue to be owned by citizens of the United States), between ports of the United States and ports on the routes and for the amounts hereinafter prescribed.

"First. From a port or ports of the Atlantic coast of the United States to Brazil, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year.

"From a port or ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to Brazil on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year.

"Second. From a port or ports of the Atlantic coast of the United States to Argentina, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a monthly compensation not exceeding $400,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $800,000 a year: Provided, That a vessel receiving compensation for mail service pursuant to contract on a voyage on this route shall not also receive compensation for mail service pursuant to contract on said voyage on the first route as described above.

"Third. From a port or ports of the Pacific coast of the United States to the Isthmus of Panama, Peru, and Chile, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year: Provided, That the requirements of this section as to the rates of speed shall be deemed to be complied with if said rates are developed during a trial of four hours continuous steaming at sea in ordinary weather in water of sufficient depth to make the test a fair and just one and if the vessels are maintained in a condition to develop such speed at any time while at sea in ordinary weather. This trial shall be made under the direction and supervision of a board of naval officers which the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint upon the application of the owner or owners of the vessel to be tested: And provided further, That all the provisions of the first nine sections of this act are hereby made applicable in all respects to the services provided for in this section: Provided, however, That the specific rates of compensation described in section 5 of this act shall not apply to the services provided for in this section, and that all ordinary repair or overhauling of a steamship employed and paid for carrying mails under this section shall be made in the United States, except in cases where drydocking is necessary and no American dry dock of sufficient capacity shall be within a distance of 500 miles of the location of said ship when the repairs shall be needed: Provided, That subject to the foregoing provisions every contract hereunder shall be awarded to that responsible bidder who will contract under penalties prescribed by the Postmaster-General for the highest running speed between the points named in said contract."

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part whenever in its judgment the public interest shall so require, without, however, impairing in any wise the obligation of any specific contract then in force which shall have been entered into under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That there shall be enrolled, in such manner and under such requirements as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, from the officers and men now and hereafter employed in the merchant marine and fisheries of the United States, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific, and the Great Lakes, such officers, petty officers, and men as may be capable of rendering service as members of a naval reserve, for duty in time of war, and who are willing to undertake such service, to be classified in grades and ratings according to their capacity as shown at time of enrollment. No man shall be thus enrolled who is not a citizen of the United States by either birth or naturalization. These members of the Naval Reserve shall be enrolled for a period of four years, during which period they shall be subject to render service on call of the President in time of war. They shall also possess such qualifications, receive such instruction, and be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon proper audit by the Auditor of the Navy Department, to pay out of any money to be annually appropriated therefor upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates to such officer, petty officer, or man thus enrolled and employed in the merchant marine or fisheries, including the coastwise trade of the Atlantic and Pacific, and the Great Lakes, as hereinafter provided, an annual retainer as follows: For each officer of the line or Engineer Corps having the rank of lieutenant in the Naval Reserve, $110; for each officer of the line or Engineer Corps having the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Naval Reserve, $90; for each officer of the line or Engineer Corps having the rank of ensign in the Naval Reserve, $80; for each man with a rating of chief petty officer, $70; for each man with a rating of petty officer, first class, $60; for each man with a rating of petty officer, second class, $48; for each man with a rating of petty officer, third class, $40; for each seaman, first class, $36; for each seaman, second class, $30; for each seaman, third class, $24. Such retainer shall be paid at the end of each year of service on certificate, by the Secretary of the Navy, that the member of the Naval Reserve has complied with the regulations and has served for at least six months of the preceding twelve months on vessels of the United States in the merchant marine or fisheries. The total number of officers, petty officers, and men enrolled in the Naval Reserve shall not at any time exceed 10,000.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1907.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I ask for information, is not this a House bill that has come here as a substitute for something or other?

Mr. GALLINGER. "For something or other" that the Senator voted against. He remembers it.

Mr. BURKETT. I am not asking the Senator from New Hampshire. I will say to him that I am asking the Chair whether this is not a House bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a Senate bill returned with a House amendment.

Mr. BURKETT. Is it not a House bill as a substitute for a Senate bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a House substitute for a Senate bill.

Mr. BURKETT. It is a House substitute for a Senate bill, and I submit, Mr. President, that I have a right to make a motion as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 290.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have made my motion, Mr. President.

Mr. BURKETT. I submit, Mr. President, that this is a matter of legislation that has come from the House. I had the floor by unanimous consent and was taken off by the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire. My motion now is made as a substitute for the motion to take up and consider the House substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to observe that the most casual examination of the rule, I think, will reveal the fact that a motion to proceed to the consideration of a message from the House of Representatives is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of that opinion.

Mr. BURKETT. I have only offered a motion as a substitute for that. The Senate can determine what they want to take up, I am sure.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Texas, briefly.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire was correct in saying that it is in order for him to make the motion he has made, but that does not necessarily make that the motion of precedence.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think if the Senator will——

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Nebraska, who had the floor on a resolution, moves that in lieu of taking up the subsidy bill the Senate proceed to the consideration of resolution No. 290.

Mr. SPOONER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives to Senate bill No. 529.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. What is the title of the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. "To promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to promote commerce."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that is a very important measure. I am informed that it has been very greatly changed from the bill as it passed the Senate. I think that Senators ought to have an opportunity to familiarize themselves with it, and I ask the Senator from New Hampshire that action on this report may be deferred and that his motion may go over until a time, pending which we can have the bill printed, so that we can read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would the Senator from Wisconsin indicate a time?

Mr. SPOONER. Four o'clock, I should say—as soon as the bill can be printed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It can be printed in a couple of hours.

Mr. SPOONER. There are some memorial exercises which were fixed, not at a specific hour, but to be taken up before recess or adjournment to-day, that can be accommodated, I suppose, to this situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, Mr. President, in reference to the interrogatory of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], that I want to be entirely courteous, and I want to proceed properly in reference to this matter. I have no disposition to crowd it at all, except that we are nearing the end of the session, and the Senator will agree with me that this is a matter of sufficient importance to be considered.

Mr. SPOONER. And to be understood before it is considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I agree with the Senator about that. So if the Senator will suggest that the matter go over until the hour of 4 o'clock this afternoon, I will very cheerfully accede to that request.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest that the printing be rushed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I will agree to that. Let that, then, be understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Wisconsin made a request that the further consideration of this matter be postponed until the hour of 4 o'clock this afternoon, and that in the meantime the bill be printed.

Mr. SPOONER. I make that motion, if it is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that further consideration of the message of the House of Representatives be postponed until 4 o'clock this afternoon, and that the report be printed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I call up the conference report on the bill limiting the hours of railroad employees.

Mr. GALLINGER. This matter is not settled yet.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well; I will wait.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish the motion to be put, and I desire to have it understood that the motion to concur in the House amendment shall be pending when it is taken up at 4 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARMACK. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, so as to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is Sunday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee moves, as an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the consideration of the message and the bill be postponed until to-morrow morning.

Mr. CARMACK. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. I transfer it to my colleague [Mr. PLATT] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KITTREDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. During his absence I withhold my vote on this question.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who is not present. I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when Mr. MONEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent because of sickness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WARNER (when Mr. STONE's name was called). My colleague is absent by reason of sickness.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I do not see him in the Chamber. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—23.

|---|---|---|---|
| Berry | Culberson | McEnery | Rayner |
| Blackburn | Daniel | McLaurin | Simmons |

So Mr. CARMACK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAYNER. I move, as an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the consideration of this matter be postponed until 8 o'clock this evening, instead of 4 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland moves, as an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the consideration of the pending bill be postponed until 8 o'clock this evening, the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin being to postpone it until 4 o'clock.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to make an observation to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia to make an observation? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to call attention to the fact that three memorial exercises are to take place to-day. I would not think, of course, of calling a matter of that kind to the attention of the Senate to antagonize any measure, but I should like to hear from the Senate as to when it could most conveniently consider that subject.

Mr. SPOONER. I am to participate in the exercises, and I will say to the Senator that that is left entirely open.

Mr. DANIEL. I know it is entirely open, but I wish to call attention to it now that we may agree as to the time when the proceedings shall commence.

Mr. HALE. I think it is proper to state, for the information of the Senate, that I hope to be able to call up the deficiency appropriation bill this afternoon and send it over to the House, and, by staying here perhaps as late as 7 or 8 o'clock, save a night session.

But I think Senators should bear in mind that whatever arrangements are made about the consideration of anything else, ought to be made subordinate to appropriation bills and conference reports. I shall try to keep the Senate out of the disagreeable necessity of a night session by bringing up the bill as soon as we get it from the Printer and giving the Senate an opportunity to pass it some time between now and 7 or 8 o'clock. I repeat that I hope no arrangement will be made for occupying the time except by subordination to the appropriation bills.

Mr. DANIEL. I concur in the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Maine, but at the same time I can not forget that it is a subject of great dignity and solemnity with which we have to deal. For that reason I should like suggestions from other Senators who are to take part in the proceedings as to the hour which will best suit the business of the Senate. Can it be agreed that at 7 or 8 o'clock this evening the memorial exercises shall be proceeded with?

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senators who have charge of appropriation bills whether it would be objectionable to take up the memorial exercises at 8 or 9 o'clock this evening?

Mr. HALE. I think perhaps the Senator had better wait, because we may dispose of the deficiency bill in two hours or in one hour, and then the memorial exercises can be entered upon.

Mr. DANIEL. I will wait, Mr. President.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to inquire if it is in order at this time to move that the pending bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would not be in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. At this time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At this time. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], and I desire that that pair shall stand for the day without further announcement. I vote "nay."

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I transfer my pair—and that arrangement will stand during the rest of the day—to my colleague [Mr. PLATT], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. That Senator being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw my vote. I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness and is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. Regarding my own pair, an arrangement has been made to transfer it to the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], so that the Senator from New York will stand paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—23.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry | Dubois | Mallory | Simmons |
| Blackburn | Frazier | Mulkey | Taliaferro |

| Carmack | Elkins | Nelson | |

So Mr. RAYNER'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARMACK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to know whether, if the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin is adopted and the consideration of this measure is postponed until 4 o'clock, at that time a motion to further postpone would be in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the Senator.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask whether, if the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin should prevail——

Mr. HALE. Has the roll call been completed, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been completed, and the result announced. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARMACK. I was making a parliamentary inquiry, whether, if the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin prevails, when the consideration of this measure is resumed on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin at 4 o'clock, a motion at that time to postpone further the consideration of the matter would be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will decide that question when it arises. The question recurs on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARMACK. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin by substituting 6 o'clock for 4 o'clock; and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Under the arrangement of pairs already announced I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—23.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry | Daniel | McLaurin | Simmons |
| Blackburn | Dubois | Newlands | Taliaferro |

So Mr. CARMACK'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin by striking out "4" and inserting "half past 5."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes to amend the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin by making the hour half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. CULBERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CARMACK. Pending that motion I move that the Senate take a recess until 6 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pending the motion the Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate take a recess until 6 o'clock.

Mr. CARMACK. I will make it 9 o'clock.

Mr. RAYNER. I move to amend by making it 8 o'clock.

Mr. SPOONER. Why not make it 3 minutes after 8?

Mr. RAYNER. Three minutes after 8.

Mr. SPOONER. Make it dignified.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. Question!

Mr. KEAN. Regular order!

Mr. RAYNER. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. RAYNER. There is an amendment to that motion. I moved to amend the motion of the Senator from Tennessee by moving that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock, instead of 9.

Mr. FRYE. The other side can filibuster a good deal better by going into minutes, instead of making it hours.

Mr. GALLINGER. They can make more motions.

Mr. CULBERSON. We seem to be doing very well at this rate, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland moves to amend the motion of the Senator from Tennessee by making the hour 8 o'clock instead of 9.

Mr. RAYNER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, that the Senate take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. CARMACK and Mr. McLAURIN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence, having had notice from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that he wanted to vote "nay" on the bill, I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the Senator from Wisconsin, and will vote. I vote "yea." This statement will hold good until the return of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I will further state that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is ill.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). By an arrangement a transfer of pairs has been made so that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] stands paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. I will make this announcement for the day unless one of the Senators mentioned shall return. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—18.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry | Dubois | McLaurin | Teller |
| Blackburn | Frazier | Overman | Tillman |
| Clark, Mont. | Latimer | Pettus | Whyte |

NOT VOTING—32.

So the Senate refused to take a recess until 9 o'clock p. m.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I made the motion to postpone the further consideration of the report until 4 o'clock in what I thought was the interest of the intelligent disposition of an important measure. I opposed the bill when it passed the Senate. I do not know but that I shall oppose it now, because I have not read it. I have never been a party to any filibuster in the Senate, and I am not willing that the motion which I made should be the foundation of a filibuster. I therefore withdraw the motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I ask for a vote on the motion I made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his motion, and the question recurs on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until half-past 7 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator to withhold his motion.

Mr. DUBOIS. And on my motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator from Idaho if he will not withhold his motion until I ask unanimous consent at this point—which I think will be given when I state the reason for it—for the present consideration of a bill which I report from the Committee on Territories. I will say to the Senator that the reason why I make this request is because there has been an amendment made to the bill by the committee and it will have to go to conference. It is a bill which will provoke no discussion at all. I ask the Senator if he will not withhold his motion until I can ask unanimous consent for that purpose?

Mr. DUBOIS. I withhold the motion with the understanding that I can renew it after the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas rises to a point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask if it is in order now to interrupt the proceedings on the subsidy bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not except by unanimous consent. The Senator from Indiana has requested unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand it is against the recent rule of the Senate introduced, I believe, by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; that applies to a Senator speaking—that he can not be interrupted for that purpose, as I understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas object?

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply wanted to call the attention of the Chair to the rule which makes it the duty of the Chair to enforce the order without an objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is this a report from a committee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is a report from the Committee on Territories, and I wish to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the Senator is out of order under the rule. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DUBOIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask that the resolution submitted by me yesterday and which has been under consideration to-day may be taken up and passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I sympathize with the Senator from Nebraska in his effort to have the resolution passed, but I object to this form of procedure in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question on the motion of the Senator from Idaho, that the Senate take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

Mr. McLAURIN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I inquire whether the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with him. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PROCTOR (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. I do not see him in his seat. If he has not voted, I wish to withdraw my vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] did not vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. Under the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], I will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—18.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Blackburn | Latimer | Overman | Taliaferro |
| Clark, Mont. | McCreary | Patterson | Tillman |

So the Senate refused to take a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I understand the pending motion is the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to concur in the amendment of the House. I think it will be conceded by all that it is manifestly impossible for Senators to vote intelligently upon that motion without having an opportunity to read the substitute bill which has come from the House. Not only so, Mr. President, but it is equally manifest that it is impracticable even to discuss it until Senators have had an opportunity to inform themselves as to the contents and provisions of that bill.

I rise for the purpose of making a suggestion to the Senator in control of the bill or of this particular motion that there be such suspension of his motion as will enable us to be in a position to act intelligently upon this most important matter; in other words, until the bill can be laid before us in print.

Mr. GALLINGER. My answer to the Senator is that at the hour of half past 1 o'clock I agreed to a postponement until 4 o'clock, and that immediately developed a filibuster, notice having been served upon me that the bill was to be killed in that way.

Mr. President, I perfectly understand the situation, and I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I am quite willing that the bill shall be printed and come back here before my motion is pressed. I have no disposition to rush this matter when Senators do not understand the bill. I had intended very briefly to explain the bill, if a request had not been made to postpone the matter. I expected that a request to explain the bill would be made, and I have stood ready at every moment to accede to it. I stand ready now.

Mr. BACON. I will say for myself, with the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the suggestion made by me is in the utmost good faith.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand it.

Mr. BACON. I desire myself to be informed as to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Nobody would question the Senator's good faith.

Mr. BACON. I do not know how far the bill goes. There are some features of the bill, as I indicated in the former debate in the Senate, that I would favor. I do not know to what extent the present bill conforms to the suggestions I then made, or whether it contains matter other than that which I indicated would be favorably considered by me. I am speaking only for myself. I had no conference with my associates on the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until half past 4 o'clock.

Mr. BACON. With a view to having it printed?

Mr. GALLINGER. And in the meantime that it be printed as hurriedly as possible and be returned to the Senate.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator make it 5 o'clock?

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I do not think that the bill can be printed and be placed in the hands of Senators and be thoroughly considered and understood in less than two hours. It is a very important measure. I understand it is practically a new bill—not the one that was sent to the House of Representatives from the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will modify my request for unanimous consent and make the hour 5 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the further consideration of the pending bill be resumed at 5 o'clock, and that in the meantime the bill be printed as speedily as possible. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McLAURIN. The request is, as I understand it, that the consideration of the vote be postponed until 5 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the effect of it.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose under the request, as soon as the report is printed, copies will be laid on the desks of Senators.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; it will be here in a very few minutes, and my motion will be pending at that time.

PURCHASE OF PLANT OF PHOENIX WATER COMPANY.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25039) to enable the city of Phoenix, in Maricopa County, Ariz., to use the proceeds of certain bonds for the purchase of the plant of the Phoenix Water Company and to extend and improve said plant, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Territories was, in section 1, on page 2, line 1, after the word "confirmed," to strike out the word "and" and to insert:

Provided, That the same shall be submitted to the electors of said city of Phoenix and approved by a majority thereof at the next general city election, and in the event of approval by a majority of said electors.

So as to make the section read:

That the contract entered into by and between the common council of the city of Phoenix, county of Maricopa, Territory of Arizona, and the Phoenix Water Company, a corporation doing business in and about the said city of Phoenix, Ariz., of date January 15, 1907, for the purchase of the water plant of the said Phoenix Water Company for the sum of $90,000 in cash and the assumption of $60,000 of first-mortgage bonds be, and the same is hereby, validated, ratified, and confirmed: Provided, That the same shall be submitted to the electors of said city of Phoenix and approved by a majority thereof at the next general city election, and in the event of approval by a majority of said electors, the said common council of the city of Phoenix is hereby authorized to proceed under said contract to purchase the said water plant described and specified in said contract, and is hereby authorized to use the money arising from the sale of the $300,000 waterworks bonds heretofore authorized by the Congress of the United States and mentioned in said contract, for the purpose of purchasing the said property and carrying out the provisions of the said contract, and for the further purpose of paying the said $60,000 assumed thereunder and of improving, extending, enlarging, repairing, and rebuilding said water system.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LEGALITY OF BUSINESS DONE BY EXPRESS COMPANIES.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I now ask that the conference report on the sixteen-hour bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PENROSE. I should like the Senator to state for what purpose.

Mr. BURKETT. In order to have the resolution, which was heretofore considered and which is now in a shape in which it is acceptable, considered and passed.

Mr. PENROSE. Will it lead to any debate?

Mr. BURKETT. It will lead to no debate.

Mr. PENROSE. I will yield, if it will lead to no debate.

Mr. BURKETT. It will not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska as he has modified it.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to inquire, investigate, and report to the Senate whether the American Express Company, Adams Express Company, United States Express Company, Pacific Express Company, and Wells-Fargo Express Company, or either of them, are unlawfully engaged, through their local or other agents, in the business of buying, selling, or handling on consignment fruits, vegetables, and oysters entering into interstate commerce; and also that the Interstate Commerce Commission be required to make the investigation at its earliest possible convenience and to report the facts and its conclusions thereon, together with its recommendations, as soon as it can be done consistent with the performance of its public duty.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I think that resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ALDRICH. It simply asks for facts, and I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. KEAN. And it has been well amended.

Mr. ELKINS. Very well.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

LANDS ON JICARILLA RESERVATION.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives in reference to House bill 23650.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23650) to quiet title to lands on Jicarilla Reservation, and to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause allotments to be made, and to dispose of the merchantable timber, and for other purposes, and asking for conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives, accede to the request of the House for a conference, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. CLAPP, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. TELLER.

CLAIMS UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13605) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FULTON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. FULTON, Mr. KEAN, and Mr. MCLAURIN.

HOURS OF LABOR OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I now ask that the conference report on the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the bill referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In line 3, page 1, strike out the word "and" and insert "or" in said amendment.

In line 13, page 1, strike out the word "corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the words "common carrier" in said amendment.

In line 13, page 2 of said amendment, after the word "continue," insert "or can go;" and in the same line strike out the four concluding words of said line, reading "or go on duty."

In line 14, page 2 of said amendment, after the word "eight," insert the word "consecutive."

In lines 14 and 15, page 2, strike out the words "within such twenty-four-hour period."

In line 15, page 2, strike out the concluding word "operator."

In line 16, page 2, after the word "dispatcher," insert the words "or dispatcher's operator in the dispatcher's office."

In lines 17 and 18, page 2, strike out "dispatches reports, transmits, receives, or delivers" and insert in lieu thereof "issues."

In line 20, page 2, strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

In lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, page 2, strike out the words "in all towers, offices, places, and stations continuously operated night and day, nor for a longer period than thirteen hours in all towers, offices, places, and stations operated only during the daytime" and insert in lieu thereof "and that no employee who by the use of the telegraph or telephone transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements (excepting those who issue train orders) or who is charged with the operation of signals or switches from towers, offices, or stations shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than twelve hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period."

In line 9, page 3, after the word "suits," insert the words "to be."

In line 13, page 3, strike out the word "verified."

In line 15, page 3, strike out the words "three years" and insert "one year."

In line 21, page 3, after the word "of," insert the word "all;" and in the same line strike out the words "duly authorized" and insert in lieu thereof the words "officers and."

In lines 1 and 2, page 4, strike out the words "with the exercise of reasonable prudence."

Strike out all of lines 7 and 8, page 4, and insert in lieu thereof "and all powers granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby extended to it in the execution of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

BOIES PENROSE,
FRANK P. FLINT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. P. HEPBURN,
J. S. SHERMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. President, I was not able to tell from the reading of the report in what respect the bill as it passed the Senate had been changed. I therefore ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to make an explanation of it.

Mr. FLINT. As the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is absent from the Chamber for a moment, I will endeavor to explain the report.

The House bill with a few amendments has been adopted in lieu of the Senate bill, with the exception of one section, that relating to telegraph operators, and an amendment that provides that when an employee of a railroad company has been engaged sixteen hours in the aggregate during the twenty-four-hour period he must have eight consecutive hours' rest. Under the bill as it came from the House it was possible to divide the eight hours rest up into two four-hour periods, or four two-hour periods, or into a six-hour and a two-hour period, so that it would not give the employee the necessary rest, and it is now changed in this bill so that the employee's rest shall be eight consecutive hours.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator be good enough to inform me whether this bill in its present form applies to all railroads engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir. The word "verified," on line 10, page 5, has been stricken out, so that complaint can be made and proceedings brought without the complaint being verified. The other changes are merely as to form and are not important. The provision in reference to the telegraph operators in the House bill has been changed by the conference report, so that certain employees are not permitted to work more than eight hours. Train dispatchers and operators in dispatcher's offices, and other operators, under the bill, are limited to twelve hours' work. There were certain employees included in the conference report that were not included in the House bill. We deemed it important that men working in the towers operating switches and signals should have their hours shortened. Under the House bill these men could work sixteen hours, but under the bill as reported by the conference committee they are limited to twelve hours.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from California whether this conference report has been printed as yet?

Mr. FLINT. The bill as proposed to be amended by the report of the conference committee was printed in to-day's RECORD.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Has the conference report been printed?

Mr. FLINT. And the conference report has also been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to ask the Senator from California concerning the amendment limiting the hours of railroad telegraphers. That amendment, as I understand, was offered in the House.

Mr. FLINT. The bill as it passed the House contained a provision limiting certain telegraph operators to nine hours' work in a day. The bill as reported by the conference committee limits certain operators or officials to eight hours a day and others to twelve hours a day. Testimony was taken before the conference committee, and it was ascertained that if the bill as passed by the House should be enacted into law, it would be impossible to obtain enough telegraph operators in the country to do the work. There are some 50,000 men now engaged in the line of work covered by this provision, and it is estimated that it would increase the number of employees from ten to fifteen thousand. No one has been able to state definitely just how much of an increase it would require, but it is admitted that it is impossible to-day to obtain telegraph operators sufficient to carry out the provisions of this bill; and if it were enacted into law as it came from the House, we would be in the position of compelling the railroads of this country to do something that it was impossible for them to do unless between now and the time that this act goes into effect some ten or fifteen thousand persons could become proficient in telegraphy so that they could perform this duty.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I simply wish to compare the status of this bill with reference to the claims of the telegraph operators. Do I understand that the demands or contentions of the telegraph operators were met by the House amendment and that that provision has since been modified by the conference committee?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will answer his question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will look at page 4436 of to-day's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he will find the statement filed in the House of Representatives, showing just what was done as to the provisions of the bill relating to telegraphers.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I am very heartily in favor of legislation on the lines indicated in the title of the bill, which is "To promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon." I introduced a bill in January last somewhat broader, the title of which is "To limit the hours of employment of telegraph and telephone operators on all railroads engaged in interstate commerce in the United States to eight hours in each day of twenty-four hours, and to prescribe the time of their eligibility." There is nothing in this bill about the time of eligibility. The bill I introduced provided that a telegraph operator should be at least 21 years of age and not over 50 years of age—a very important provision, I think.

I am in favor of the first paragraph of the pending bill, which limits to sixteen hours in twenty-four the service of railroad employees, etc. The part of the conference report to which I wish to address my remarks is in regard to dispatchers and telegraph operators. I might say here that I think it is time that we should have some legislation on the line indicated in the pending bill, which is the basis of the conference report. Nearly every morning the newspapers have reports about a collision, accident, or railroad wreck. This morning the papers announced a head-on collision on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, with four dead and many hurt. Yesterday morning the newspapers announced a wreck on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad near Connellsville, Pa., in which the engineer was killed, the fireman fatally injured, and forty other persons injured. I read a few days ago, in the New York Tribune, a list compiled showing forty-nine railroad wrecks during the last six months, exclusive of the last tragedy on the New York Central. According to that table, which I have in my hand, 351 persons have been killed and 474 injured. Nearly every newspaper brings to us information about some accident or wreck, and it is high time we were doing something, so far as we can, to prevent these appalling wrecks and accidents.

The first paragraph of the second section of this bill limiting the hours of service of railroad employees to sixteen hours in twenty-four I think is a very good provision; but I do not understand the second paragraph of section second in the same way that the Senator from California has explained it. There is in that provision, as will be noticed, an exception of persons who issue train orders. If the section be closely analyzed, it will be seen that while there are no dispatcher's operators, there are operators in dispatch offices who are not embraced in the bill. However, even in the case of dispatcher's operators, they are not all limited to eight hours, for the reason that the provision applies only to those who issue orders. The dispatchers issue the orders and the operators only transmit, receive, or deliver an order. If the operator issues an order, he is clearly a dispatcher, and dispatchers now work only eight hours. At present operators work twelve hours, so there is no change in the law with regard to them, as the bill provides that all operators shall work twelve hours.

The bill which passed the House of Representatives provided that in continuous day and night offices operators should work not exceeding nine hours in twenty-four hours, and in day offices not exceeding thirteen hours. It does not appear to me, Mr. President, that this conference report on this important bill changes the existing conditions. It does not protect or benefit telegraph operators as they should be. I can see that it benefits railroad employees, but I do not see where it benefits telegraph operators as they should be protected and benefited and their hours of service limited.

There is no doubt that quite a number of serious collisions have been brought about by telegraph operators being overworked. I am heartily in favor of limiting the time that telegraph operators shall be engaged to eight hours—and not exceeding nine—out of twenty-four. I want legislation that is fair and just to the railroads and fair and just to the telegraph operators and legislation that will protect the traveling public. I do not believe that this report as presented by the conference committee comes up to that standard.

The conference report contains some good provisions, and while I believe it should be amended, yet if it can not be amended I shall vote for it as the best that can be done at present.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I was a member of the conference committee of the Senate that made this report, but I did not concur therein, nor did the Democratic member of the conference committee on the part of the House do so. At the same time, Mr. President, I recognize the fact that this is a distinctive step of progress in the right direction. I was so occupied in matters of engagement before the Senate and the Appropriations Committee of the Senate that I could attend but two of the meetings of the conferees. Their last meeting it was impossible for me to attend by reason of actual and necessary occupation upon the Senate floor.

The measure as embodied in the conference report is, in my judgment, a decided improvement upon Senate bill 5133, which was adopted by this body. That bill in its first section limited the hours of employees on railroads to sixteen, with certain modifications in particular cases.

This bill as now embodied in the conference report manifests considerable improvement. Nothing better is likely to be attainable during this session, now within forty-eight hours of its close. Hence I am disposed to vote for the conference report. While it falls short of the provisions made in the House amendment to the Senate bill, it is nevertheless a betterment of existing laws, and also in some respects a betterment of the Senate bill.

I recognize the difficulties that environ the subject. I am quite sure that the Senate committee, although I do not altogether agree with their majority report, labored hard and faithfully with a view to accomplishing the best result that they deemed practicable. Those who oppose the limitation of hours by Congressional enactment as applicable to the interstate commerce of the country will be in some measure discontented by this bill. Those who had large hopes, especially with regard to the ordinary telegraph operators, will also be dissatisfied with this measure. If we had ample time to discuss it, I should advocate a more liberal measure than is found in the framework either of the Senate bill or of the conference report. At the same time I do not feel that any of us would be justified in voting against the conference report, for the reason that it is not only an improvement of the present order of things, but also in some substantial respects an improvement upon the measure which the Senate itself adopted.

By the House substitute for the Senate bill it was provided:

That no operator, train dispatcher, or other employee who by the use of the telegraph or telephone dispatches reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than nine hours in any twenty-four-hour period in all towers, offices, places, and stations continuously operated night and day, nor for a longer period than thirteen hours in all towers, offices, places, and stations operated only during the daytime.

There is an exception in case of emergency, "when the employees named in this proviso may be permitted to be and remain on duty for four additional hours in a twenty-four-hour period on not exceeding three consecutive days in any week."

Mr. President, the conference report adopts eight hours as the lowest limit instead of nine hours, and at the same time and in effect it extracts those who are named in the eight-hour limit from the provisions of the Senate bill which required sixteen hours as its lowest limit. The provision now embodied in the measure recommended by the conferees reads:

That no train dispatcher, or dispatcher's operator in the dispatcher's office, or other employee who by the use of the telegraph or telephone issues orders pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than eight hours in any twenty-four-hour period.

So that here, Mr. President, in this phrase is a clear, explicit, and wise adoption of the eight-hour rule applicable—

First, to train dispatchers.

Second, to the operators of train dispatchers in their offices.

Third, to those employees who by the telegraph or telephone issue orders pertaining to or affecting train movements. This is progress.

Mr. President, it will be observed that in a second part of this recommended measure it is provided—

That no employee who by the use of the telegraph or telephone transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements (excepting those who issue train orders) or who is charged with the operation of signals or switches from towers, offices, or stations shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than twelve hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period except in case of emergency, when the employees named in this proviso may be permitted to be and remain on duty for four additional hours in a twenty-four-hour period on not exceeding three consecutive days in any week.

It was much desired, and many petitions, letters, telegrams, and all manner of communications were made in which the desire was expressed, that this class of operatives, like the distinctive classes to whom I have already referred, should be embraced in the eight-hour period. This was deemed by the majority of the committee an unattainable result at this time. There are many who wish to see the whole body of telegraphic operators embraced in the eight-hour law, as in the House amendment. It was to the contrary that three classes of them, to wit, the train dispatcher, the dispatcher's operator in his office, and other employees who issue orders pertaining to or affecting train movements are put under the eight-hour rule, and that the other classes embodied in the second amendment, which I have explained, had best be withdrawn from the sixteen-hour rule and are placed upon an intermediate scale of hours, namely, twelve.

So, Mr. President, there are two elements of progression in this measure, and I do not think that any of us would be justified, at this late stage of this Congress so soon to adjourn, in voting against the adoption of the report, when the good it accomplishes might thereby be wholly lost. There are some other changes; for instance, the fine for violation of the law to be enacted is reduced from $1,000 to $500. That is the law. In the second place, violation of the law was made a misdemeanor by the Senate measure, whereas under the amendment as now recommended there is only provision made for the recovery of a fine. In the third place, the limitation of three years to bring actions for violation of the law is reduced to one. If time permitted us to discuss these competing measures, I might criticise some of these and other changes. But, taking the conference bill as a whole—the law as it stands, the law as the Senate recommended it and as now embodied in this measure—there is too much good in it to be ignored and not enough evil to make us vote against it under the existing environment.

There is a difficulty about the matter which I may be pardoned, I hope, if I spend a few moments to advert to. Train dispatchers and those operatives who have to transmit the messages upon which trains are moved are here put in the eight-hour rule. The responsibility of their positions is so great, the danger that arises from error is so disastrous, that we may well rejoice that this improvement will be verified by the bill.

As to the other class of operatives, who occupy signal towers, etc., as set forth in the conference report, it may be regretted that they are not also more liberally dealt with. At the same time it should be remembered that their limit is twelve hours, instead of being sixteen, as in the Senate bill, and instead of being no limit at all, as under the absence of law on the subject which now prevails.

The operators at the small way stations, who have to transmit messages during the period of twenty-four hours, who have but very few trains to deal with and very few messages to send, are public servants of great responsibility and importance to the public weal. Their business, it is said, is frequently so light that the railroads have felt that they could not pay fitting salaries for the whole period in which telegraphic service may be required but is not sure to be required. Consequently the companies have often intermingled the business of operating with other businesses at the station and imposed a variety of duties upon the person employed. A witness before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House—I mean the Hon. Arthur P. Murphy, who has been prominently connected with this measure—relates how this is. He says, on page 39 of the House hearings:

An operator is required, in addition to his telegraphic duties, where the post-office is within the required radius under the law, to carry the United States mails from the post-office to the depot, put it on the trains, take care of it, take it off, and in the morning take it back to the post-office, and the same in relation to day trains. The operator, in addition to his duties of telegraphing, receiving orders, handling his block, and keeping his block sheet, is required to sweep out the depot; he is required to sell tickets, at a great many stations both local tickets and coupons; he is required to handle all of the baggage—check it, truck it, put it on the trains, take it off and put it in the house. In addition he is required to handle all of the express. At stations where they have no electric lights—and the company generally puts them in when they almost give them to them—they are required to take care of their signals and of all of the lamps used in and about the depot. They are required on a great many of the roads—all that I know about—to take care of the switch lamps or lamps that are on the switch targets; to clean them, take care of them, put them out, and take them in.

There is a good deal of evidence of this description, and some have stated sometimes that the operative at the small way station is the country doctor or storekeeper or anybody who happens to be around, who may diversify his employment by sending telegrams when they are necessary.

I know also—and I wish to state the case with absolute candor and fairness—that it is said that the condition described by Mr. Murphy has been improved in recent years and does not now exist so generally, at least, as of the time when Mr. Murphy spoke by his own experience and observation. But here is a pronounced difficulty that arises with reference to the operative who has but a little business to do. To telegraph respecting a moving train, of which steam is the power and which if misdirected may bring upon the passengers on that train a catastrophe which causes the heart of the whole country to bleed and carries sorrow and loss to many a household, is to perform one of the most responsible and delicate operations connected with our social system. If the telegrapher be called on four, five, eight, or ten times a day, and especially if he be called on at hours which he can not anticipate, he may be so distracted by other cares as not to be able to put his mind promptly or concentratively on the subject, if he has duties commingled with other duties. On the other hand, the railroads say that if this system of operation is broken up, it must inevitably lead to the result of abandoning the stations altogether. There is a collision of interest between the convenience of the countryside, between fitness of salary, and between the gravity of the duties which are to be performed.

The whole subject must ere long be embraced by some mind expert in knowledge and bent upon so classifying the duties of all these operatives and so apportioning their assignments that the public may be sure that no man sends any telegram respecting the moving of cargoes of humanity that are carried across the country without being a reliable, an expert, and a responsible, and constantly attentive man. While this will be recognized as just and right by all fair-minded men, it is stated per contra and it is in evidence before the committee that the operatives have declined to teach others the art of telegraphy, and the railroad companies say that if they were forced to provide at once a separate operator whose sole business it should be to attend to the railroad telegraph at all the way stations in the country they would have to employ 20,000 more men, and that the country does not furnish them. They are not to be had, according to their statements.

I read this morning a statement such as that referred to by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCreary] who a few moments ago commented on this subject. The article that attracted my attention was in the Literary Digest and appeared to be a very cautious and careful estimate of the casualties on the railroads of this country for the last six months. It was an appalling schedule. It showed that 4,000 human beings had lost their lives by accidents on railway trains of the United States within six months past.

Estimating human life at a thousand dollars a head, there would be a sum of $4,000,000 lost. But life is a thing that can not be estimated in money. There was a vaster loss to the country in the brain power and nerve power many times this pecuniary estimate. And wholly beyond the range of figures to calculate is the horror, affliction, and distress caused by such slaughter.

Mr. President, I would call attention to the fact that when two American armies stood up for three days and shot death into each other's bosoms at Gettysburg there were not so many men slain in either army as are slain upon the railroad of this country in six months of calm prosperity and peace.

A recent writer called attention to the fact that notwithstanding all the safety appliances which have been required by law and which are being adopted in the transportation service, notwithstanding all the complaint that has come up from the country and the reflection and energy that have been exercised upon this subject, the ratio of accidents is increasing. There must be a cause for that. Are our people becoming more reckless in their daily conduct, or does it lie in some human causation which can be reached by the hand of the law? Is it due to the fact that in the immense rush of traffic and travel over the railroads they are conducting a double-track business on a one-track road? Does it arise from the fact that the fierce competitions of our times have imposed upon the railway operatives longer hours of work than they can stand? Have they been so overworked that their alertness has been blunted, their strength weakened, their faculties blurred so that they have fallen below the standard of efficiency that should be maintained? Undoubtedly it is the fact that there is no harder-working body of operatives in the world than those who operate our transportation system, and none who bear so constant a strain.

Mr. President, I shall not at this stage prolong my remarks save to say that this is a causation suspected by many, and believed by some. When the Senate shall have adopted, as I anticipate it will, the conference report, it will at least have the satisfaction of knowing that it has gone forward in a wise step to relieve and remove in some degree what would seem to be one of the causes of these many and increasing accidents. It will also have the further satisfaction of knowing that when analysis has better explored the subject and enlightenment better comprehended it, they will find the way paved to further action by the tentative and progressive steps we are now taking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. HALE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado rise to this report?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I am ready to go on with the deficiency appropriation bill. If we can pass it sometime within the next hour or two, it will go to the House and will obviate the necessity for a night session. I should be very glad to have it taken up and considered. In the meantime the conference report, of course, holds its place and will come up afterwards.

Mr. PATTERSON. As far as I am concerned, I am quite willing that the appropriation bill shall be taken up.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25851) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 2, after line 16, to insert:

International Maritime Exposition: To enable the Government of the United States to participate in the International Maritime Exposition to be held at Bordeaux, France, from May 1 to October 31, 1907, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. After line 21 I move to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 8, on page 12.

Mr. BACON. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine about a provision which has just been passed. I desire to know whether, on page 8, under the head of the "Transportation of silver coin," it is intended to restore the regulation which has previously existed, under which the Government has heretofore paid the express charges upon silver coin shipped to different parts of the country for the benefit of private individuals, banks, etc., or does it mean simply the shipment on account of the Government?

Mr. HALE. It is simply to carry the appropriation which the Senate put in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the next year, to cover the time between now and the 1st of July.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not understand my inquiry. He will notice that on page 8 there is an appropriation for the transportation of silver coin. The inquiry I made of the Senator was whether that was intended to restore the regulation which has heretofore existed, under which the Government has paid the express charges of coin shipped to different individuals who, for instance, would send large bills to the Treasury and desire silver coin in the place of it. That was formerly the regulation, and a year or two ago it was changed, and the payment of express charges by the Government for such purposes was abandoned.

This item is not very clear to my mind, and I desire to know whether it intended to restore that or whether it relates to a different matter.

Mr. HALE. It is not a matter of regulation. It is a matter provided by law.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of the legal regulations.

Mr. HALE. It continues what is now in force.

Mr. BACON. It does not make any change as to what was done before?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to secure from the Senator from Maine some information in regard to the items which have just been read, beginning on page 75, which are under the heading of "Judgments, Court of Claims."

Of course I suppose these are all matters of record, being judgments of the court, and these are for the payment of the judgments of that court; but the point which strikes me as requiring some little explanation is this: These judgments of the court doubtless have all of them been matured prior to last month, and yet we see some very large increases in the Senate over the amounts provided for in the House. Where they are small amounts of increases it is not a matter to be especially remarked. For instance, at the bottom of page 75 the House provision as to the Treasury Department was for $71,574.45, and the Senate provision is for $72,860.37. That is a small amount, and we can readily understand how those differences should exist.

Under the War Department, however, which is the next item, in the House the judgments of the Court of Claims were stated at $62,582, while the Senate amendment proposes to appropriate $120,223. Under the Navy Department the House provision was for $21,048, and the Senate provision is for $156,724. Under the Department of Justice the amount is increased from $3,111 to $6,880. Under the Post-Office Department there is no increase. Under the Department of Commerce and Labor there is an amendment providing for the appropriation of $2,672. The succeeding amount is simply the aggregate.

I suppose these amendments are all based upon information which comes from the Departments, but I can not understand how the Departments should send the House information so inaccurate as to require when the Senate deals with this matter, which is a matter of record—judgments—that the appropriation should in some instances be absolutely double in the Senate what it is in the House.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is done as it has always been done. Just before the consideration of the annual deficiency appropriation bill the Senate sends up a resolution directing that additional estimates for judgments of the Court of Claims shall be submitted in order to incorporate them in the bill. That was done yesterday by a Senate resolution, and the answer is to be found in documents the Departments have sent in, and that are in the room of the Committee on Appropriations. The Senate can see from them there that instead of putting them in the bill in detail we added the amounts referred to in those documents.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has not caught the point of my inquiry. I can understand, Mr. President, when an appropriation is for an estimated expenditure that there may be differences of estimate in the House and in the Senate; but these are appropriations for the payment of judgments, which are of record and must necessarily be of record, and the point of my inquiry is that as these appropriations relate not to estimates, but to judgments of record, how is it that the reports submitted to the House should be different from the reports submitted to the Senate, if they apply to records?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I can not tell the Senator. The Departments do not send us any definite recommendations, but send in the documents showing in detail what each judgment is for and the appropriations are for, judgments which have been rendered by the court since the House laid the foundation for this bill, some two months ago, I suppose. We always do that. But I can not tell the Senator why it is.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator means that this increase represents judgments which have been procured in the Court of Claims since the House bill was passed or since the House bill was made up——

Mr. HALE. Not since the House bill was passed, but since the House bill was made up.

Mr. BACON. Well, that is the information which I desired to have. The Senator will pardon me, Mr. President, if I say that while we have the most perfect and unbounded confidence not only in the industry but in the judgment of the Senators who are members of this great committee, there is not given to the Senate the information which enables Senators to vote intelligently on appropriations. Nine Senators out of ten in the Chamber vote exclusively upon the fact that they have confidence that the Senate Committee on Appropriations has acted wisely and properly; but so far as any individual judgment is concerned, in nine cases out of ten it is absolutely impossible for any Senator to form the slightest conception whether or not the appropriation is a proper one. We are guided exclusively and necessarily by the method of procedure, by the question of whether or not we have confidence in the committee, and we vote for bills solely upon that hypothesis. It must be apparent that Senators do not know as to these items the facts upon which the appropriations are based.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, beginning at the top of page 77, to insert:

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases certified to Congress at its present session in Senate Document No. 370, $55,209; said judgments to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian Service: Provided, That no one of said judgments provided in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney-General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exist no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 80, line 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 1, after the first word "seven," it is proposed to strike out the second word "seven" and insert "one million two;" so as to read "$1,200,384.68."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I submit the document which I send to the desk, and ask to have it printed in the RECORD in connection with the last amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The document will be printed as requested.

The document referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, February 28, 1907.

The appropriation for "Regular supplies" was less by $500,000 for the fiscal year 1907 than that for the fiscal year 1906. Notwithstanding every effort on the part of this office to curtail expenses, the increased cost of forage for the animals, fuel, and engine supplies for electric lighting and for electric lights, and power at sea-coast artillery posts, etc., together with the increase in the quantities of forage made necessary by the additional animals authorized for machine-gun platoons, mounts for field service, etc., and of fuel by the additional barracks, etc., recently completed and which require to be heated, made a deficiency estimate necessary. The amount, $300,000, is included in the $1,200,384.68 required on this account and for maneuvers and Cuban pacification, no appropriations having been made for the two latter purposes.

At a recent hearing on the deficiency bill, before the House Committee on Appropriations, it became apparent that the committee was reluctant to allow the amount in which the Department is deficient on account of its ordinary work. Since then there has been prepared, and is submitted herewith, a detailed statement showing the excess cost of fuel and forage for the present fiscal year over the previous one, $559,341.72. It appears that forage now costs, on an average, 6 cents per hundred, and coal 1⅞ cents per hundred more than last year, and wood about 51 cents more per cord.

The Department has been able to save in other directions, to some extent, but the deficiency estimated for is absolutely required, otherwise the contractors for fuel and forage must go unpaid for supplies now being delivered under contracts entered into under the provisions of section 3732, Revised Statutes.

In this connection it may be remarked that this Department can not, when preparing estimates far in advance, anticipate increase or decrease in the cost of fuel and forage supplies.

The matter being urgent, it is recommended that the necessary steps be taken to bring the condition of affairs to the attention of the Senate Committee on Appropriations; it appears to be too late to secure proper consideration in the House. The whole of the sum estimated for, $1,200,384.68, is absolutely needed.

In submitting the deficiency estimates it was not supposed that Congress would require, or desire, minute details, so that steps were only taken to furnish such general information as had heretofore usually been called for, and as would show that the deficiency was unavoidable in the conduct of the affairs of the Department under existing laws, regulations, and conditions. Immediately it was discovered that precise details were desired the work of compiling the data was begun, but the labor involved prevented the earlier completion of the task.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am about to submit an amendment that is clearly subject to a point of order if any Senator feels that it is his duty to make it. It is an amendment providing for temporary street railway facilities to the Union Station, so as to get transportation for the men, women, and children from all over the country who will come to Washington after the Union Station is completed and before we can get legislation to make a permanent extension of the existing street railway lines.

I do not care to discuss the matter. The Senate is fully aware of the efforts I have made to get permanent extensions, and those are impossible at this session of Congress. I offer the amendment with the hope that the Senate will allow it to go in the bill, so that we will not have a condition of things which will be a reproach to the city when the station is finished, which will be in a very few months.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

That the City and Suburban Railway of Washington be, and it hereby is, authorized to construct a double-track overhead electric temporary connection between its existing tracks at G and First streets NW. and Third and D streets NE. and at the northwest corner of Stanton square, the aforesaid temporary tracks to cross the Union Station plaza within 50 feet of the entrance to the Union Station.

That the Washington Railway and Electric Company be, and it hereby is, authorized to construct a double-track overhead electric temporary connection between its existing tracks at Delaware avenue and C streets NE. and the temporary tracks of the City and Suburban Railway of Washington hereinbefore authorized; also a double-track loop on the Union Station plaza connecting with the tracks herein authorized.

That the Capital Traction Company be, and it hereby is, authorized to operate its cars (under intercompany agreement) over the tracks, herein authorized, from Delaware avenue and C streets NE. to the Union Station: Provided, That immediately after the construction of such permanent street railway connections to the Union Station as may hereafter be authorized by law the several companies shall immediately remove all the overhead electric construction herein authorized.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine, who has been very industrious at this session, as he is at every session, in keeping general legislation off appropriation bills, if he thinks this amendment should be inserted?

Mr. HALE. I think, as the Senator who offered it said, it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I make the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 7.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 2, after the words "per annum," it is proposed to insert:

And the salary of each of the general appraisers of merchandise shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, that it is a change of existing law and is legislation affecting salaries.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and sustains it.

Mr. MCENERY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the bottom of page 76 the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to return to the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana the money taken from said bank by military order on June 19, 1862, and now in the Treasury, and a sum sufficient to do so is hereby appropriated.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that it is an old claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BACON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, given to the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim or claims of any owner, or the legal representatives of any owner, to the proceeds of any abandoned or captured property which have heretofore been placed in the United States Treasury, notwithstanding any former suit to recover said proceeds may have been dismissed by said court for want of jurisdiction: Provided, That said claimant proves his or her right to such proceeds and brings suit to recover the same within two years from the passage of this act: Provided further, That no proof shall be required of the loyalty of the claimant or of the original owner of the property seized or taken by the United States at the time of its seizure.

SEC. 2. That any testimony, affidavits, reports of officers, and other papers on file in the Departments or in the courts relating to such claims shall be considered by the court as competent evidence and such weight given thereto as in its judgment is right and proper.

SEC. 3. That all judgments rendered in favor of claimants under the provisions of this act shall be paid out of the captured and abandoned property fund, as provided by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 4. That all sales, transfers, or assignments of any claims against said fund heretofore or hereafter made, except such as have occurred in the due administration of decedents' estates, and all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorneys are hereby declared null and void, and all warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of such judgments shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimant or his lawful heirs, executors, or administrators, or transferred under administrative proceedings, except so much thereof as shall be allowed claimants' attorneys by the court for prosecuting said claims; and the Court of Claims in rendering judgment under this act shall in each case fix the amount of compensation to the attorney or attorneys prosecuting the claim in said court.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BACON. I will detain the Senate but a moment. I desire to say that this amendment, which was presented by me in the Senate day before yesterday and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, is a copy of a bill pending in the House—No. 25400—which was introduced by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, and I hold in my hand the report of the House committee on the subject of the propriety of the enactment into law of what is proposed in that amendment.

Without detaining the Senate to read it, I ask consent to have it printed in the RECORD in connection with the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 7540, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25400) to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction of claims for captured and abandoned property which was sold and the proceeds thereof placed in the Treasury of the United States, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass:

Under the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, known as the "captured and abandoned property acts," and other kindred measures, a large amount of property in the States declared in insurrection was seized by the military and other Federal authorities, without regard to its ownership or the political status of its owners, and subsequently sold and the proceeds paid into the National Treasury. The sum realized from this source at the close of the war, as shown by a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, amounted to something over $30,000,000.

The third section of the act of March 12, 1863, under which the greater portion of the property was seized, provided as follows:

"Any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims; and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds, after the deduction of any purchase money which may have been paid, together with the expense of transportation and sale of such property, and any other lawful expenses attending the disposition thereof." (12 Stat. L., 820.)

Under this provision of the statute a large number of suits were commenced in the Court of Claims by persons claiming to be the owners of property seized under this and similar statutes, and in cases in which the claimants could make the proof required by the act judgments were rendered in their favor for the net proceeds of their property paid into the Treasury, and by this and other means the fund in the Treasury has been reduced, so that the sum now on hand amounts to something over $10,000,000.

Many questions arose under the act of March 12, 1863, such as, "What constituted proof of loyalty?" "When was the rebellion suppressed?" and "When did the two years expire within which suit could be commenced?" All of which were vigorously contested, and in which the court ruled strictly and rigidly against the claimants, rendering appeals to the Supreme Court necessary, and by which the owners of the property were delayed or deterred from preferring their claims under the act.

In December, 1869, the Supreme Court of the United States decided, in Anderson v. The United States (9 Wall., 56), that the rebellion was suppressed on the 20th of August, 1866, the date of President Johnson's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of civil and political rights, and the limitation of the right to commence suit took effect or expired on the 20th of August, 1868. And it thus appears that the period in which the claimants could bring suits to recover the net proceeds of their property had expired more than one year prior to the decision fixing the date of the close of the war was announced and when it was too late for the claimants to derive any benefit from the decision.

It was not till 1871 that the Supreme Court gave full consideration to this act of March 12, 1863. In December of that year, in the case of Klein v. The United States (13 Wall., 128), the court decided—

(1) That it was not the intention of Congress by the enactment of that statute that the title to property seized under it should be divested from the loyal owners.

(2) That the proceeds of the property should go into the Treasury without change of ownership.

(3) That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal.

(4) That it was for the Government itself to determine whether those proceeds should be restored to the owner or not.

(5) That the President's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of rights of property, and particularly that of July 4, 1868, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of the owners of such property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury, and the restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned.

(6) And that "the Government constituted itself the trustee for those who by that act were declared entitled to the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and for those whom it should thereafter recognize as entitled."

And in its opinion the court uses this language:

"That it was not the intention of Congress that the title to these proceeds should be divested absolutely out of the original owners of the property seems clear upon a comparison of different parts of the act.

"We have already seen that those articles which became by the simple fact of capture the property of the captor, as ordnance, munitions of war, and the like, or in which third parties acquired rights which might be made absolute by decree, as ships and other vessels captured as prize, were expressly excepted from the operation of the act, and it is reasonable to infer that it was the purpose of Congress that the proceeds of the property for which the special provision of the act was made should go into the Treasury without change of ownership. Certainly such was the intention in respect to the property of loyal men. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal appears probable from the circumstances that no provision is anywhere made for confiscation of it, while there is no trace in the statute book of intention to divest ownership of private property not excepted from the effect of this act otherwise than by the proceedings for confiscation.

"It is thus seen that, except as to property used in actual hostilities, as mentioned in the first section of the act of March 12, 1863, no titles were divested in the insurgent States unless in pursuance of a judgment rendered after due legal proceedings. The Government recognized to the fullest extent the humane maxims of the modern law of nations, which exempt private property of noncombatant enemies from capture as booty of war. Even the law of confiscation was sparingly applied. The cases were few indeed in which the property of any not engaged in actual hostilities was subjected to seizure and sale.

"We conclude, therefore, that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested from the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. * * *

"The restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned on application within two years from the close of the war. It was, in fact, promised for an equivalent. 'Pardon and restoration of political rights' were 'in return' for the oath and its fulfillment."

And then the court adds this strong language:

"To refuse it would be a breach of faith not less cruel and astounding than to abandon the freed people whom the Executive had promised to maintain in their freedom."

And in the prior case of The United States v. Padleford (9 Wall., 531) the court held that under the proclamation of pardon issued by President Lincoln, dated December 8, 1863, and the act of March 12, 1863, the Government is a trustee, holding the proceeds of the petitioner's property for his benefit, and having been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred in that character, loses nothing by the judgment, which simply awards to the petitioner what is his own.

This decision in the Klein case settled the important questions in relation to the owners of captured and abandoned property and their rights under the act of March 12, 1863, and subsequent statutes relating to that subject, and it left nothing for Congress to do but provide a tribunal to which claimants might resort to establish their absolute right, in the language of the Supreme Court, to their share of the fund derived from the sale of such property.

In June, 1873, the case of Haycraft v. The United States was commenced in the Court of Claims to recover the net proceeds of certain property of the claimant. The suit was brought more than two years after the suppression of the rebellion, upon the theory that, as the Government held those proceeds in trust, as decided in the Klein case, it was liable outside of the act of March 12, 1863, upon an implied promise to pay to the claimant his portion of the fund; but the Court of Claims decided that the provision in that act limiting the right of the claimant to two years in which to prefer his claim was a limitation upon its jurisdiction, and thereupon it dismissed the petition. In January, 1875, this decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court, which held that the question was one of jurisdiction and not of limitation, and that Congress having legislated upon the subject, the Court of Claims did not possess jurisdiction to entertain suits of this character under an implied contract to refund to claimants the net proceeds of their property in the Treasury. (Haycraft v. The United States, 22 Wall., 81.)

While the Haycraft case was pending in the Court of Claims, and before its decision by the Supreme Court, a large number of suits were commenced in the former court upon the theory on which the Haycraft case was based, viz, that the Government was liable to the claimants for the net proceeds of their property, under an implied contract, and these cases were all continued upon the dockets of the court till the decision of the Supreme Court to which we have referred, when they were all dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Here, then, was the difficulty which existed—parties having rights which they were unable to enforce, for the reason that there was no tribunal to which to resort for their enforcement. It requires no argument to prove that a right may exist where there is no remedy for its enforcement; and this was, and is to-day, the precise predicament of all persons claiming an interest in the captured and abandoned property fund. While the power of the Court of Claims in the premises had ceased to exist, the rights of the claimants had survived; and neither the court nor the claimants, in order to enable each to act, required anything more than this: The one the privilege to sue and the other the right to entertain and determine such suits.

To remedy the wrong which existed in this respect, and in order to make effective the decisions of the Supreme Court to which reference has been made, Congress enacted section 1059 of the Revised Statutes, giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction of four classes of claims. The fourth clause of said section reads as follows:

"Fourth. Of all claims for the proceeds of captured or abandoned property, as provided by the act of March 12, 1863, chapter 120, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States,' or by the act of July 2, 1864, chapter 225, being an act in addition thereto: Provided, That the remedy given in cases of seizure under the said acts, by preferring claim in the Court of Claims, shall be exclusive, precluding the owner of any property taken by agents of the Treasury Department as abandoned or captured property, in virtue or under color of said acts, from suit at common law, or any other mode of redress whatever, before any court other than the Court of Claims."

And Congress provided for the payment of any judgment the court might render in favor of claimants under said fourth clause by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, which, under the head of "Permanent annual appropriations," among other things, provides as follows:

"For the return of proceeds from the sale of captured and abandoned property in insurrectionary districts to the owners thereof, who may, to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims, prove their right to and ownership of said property."

These provisions of the Revised Statutes construed together provided a complete and adequate remedy for the claimants under the act of March 12, 1863, and subsequent statutes relating to the subject. The statutes declare this was the law on the 1st of December, 1873, though they were not approved by the President till June 22, 1874, and were not published till in 1875. These provisions of the statutes were in force, though not published, when the Haycraft case, above cited, was decided by the Supreme Court, and it can hardly be doubted that the decision in that case would have been different if the court had been aware of the existence of the two clauses in sections 1059 and 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

To every unprejudiced mind the language of the fourth clause of section 1059 is clear and unambiguous, and requires no construction to arrive at the intention of the National Legislature. It could have had but one object, and that was to confer upon the Court of Claims a jurisdiction which had once existed and which Congress well knew had expired by limitation. While the provision confers no new rights upon those claiming the fund derived from the sale of their property, but, on the contrary, restricts those rights by making the jurisdiction exclusive, it provides a tribunal before which they can go to enforce existing rights, and that tribunal one specially provided for adjudicating claims against the Government. Acting upon the assumption that the Government can not be sued without its consent, the legal effect of the clause is to give that consent, with the proviso that the claimants shall be confined in the prosecution of their claims to the provisions of the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864—that is to say, that they should only recover the net proceeds of the sale of their property after deducting all costs and charges. And this conclusion is strengthened when section 3689 is construed in connection with section 1059.

The act of March 12, 1863, provided for the payment of all judgments rendered under its provisions, and if by the fourth clause of section 1059 it was only intended to continue the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims as to suits then pending before it, then no additional legislation was necessary to provide for the payment of any judgments rendered by the court in favor of the claimants. Besides, the limitation of two years in the act of March 12, 1863, operated upon the claimants rather than upon the court. It gave them the two years in which to prefer their claims to the proceeds of their property, and the act nowhere provided that the jurisdiction of the court should terminate in two years, whether the cases then pending were disposed of or not. But when Congress came to confer a new jurisdiction upon the court without limitation as to time in which suits might be commenced, in order to make the remedy effective it was necessary to make provision for the payment of any judgments obtained by the claimants, and this Congress did by the enactment of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

The Court of Claims, however, adhering to its habit of ruling rigidly against claimants in that court, took a different view of sections

1059 and 3689, and in the case of Mary A. Wade, administratrix, and B. M. Martel, syndic, held that Congress did not intend by the above sections to repeal the two years' limitation in the act of March 12, 1863, and that these sections would not admit of such a construction, thus placing Congress in the ridiculous attitude of conferring jurisdiction upon the court and in the same clause limiting that jurisdiction to a period of time which had expired five years previously. This decision is based upon the ground "that the object of the revision of the statutes was not to change existing law, but to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, which shall be in force at the time the commissioners should make the final report of their doings," and that the commissioners, "instead of reenacting the full language, for conciseness and condensation merely referred to the act and provided that the court should have jurisdiction of all claims for the proceeds of captured or abandoned property, as provided in the act of March 12, 1863."

Without stopping to criticise further this decision of the Court of Claims, it is sufficient to say that it completely nullifies the fourth clause of section 1059 of the Revised Statutes and defeats the will of the lawmaking power as expressed by that provision of the law. So long as that decision stands, even were there no other obstacles in the way, no suits can be maintained in the Court of Claims for the recovery of any portion of the captured and abandoned property fund, and the doors of that court, as well as all other legal tribunals, are closed against the claimants.

This is the condition and state of the law bearing upon this subject at this time as construed and defined by the courts, and it seems apparent that if this captured and abandoned property fund is ever to be distributed to its owners some additional legislation is necessary to that end. If the title of the owners of the property seized and sold under the captured and abandoned property acts has never been divested; if the Government holds the net proceeds of the property thus sold without any legal title thereto and as trustee for the owners, and if the President's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, including restoration to civil and political right, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of all owners of the property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury, as the highest judicial tribunal of the nation has decided, then in equity and good conscience it ought not to retain the money, and the honor and dignity of the nation demand that some provision should be made by which the claimants of the fund may be enabled to enforce their rights thereto. For more than thirty years the Government has had the use of this money.

For more than thirty years the claimants have been appealing to Congress for relief; and if Congress in the discharge of more pressing duties has neglected this appeal, or if the remedy it provided has proved inefficacious, the stronger the reason for some action in this direction at the present time. The claimants are fast passing away, leaving as an inheritance to their children the prospect of litigation with their Government; and the witnesses upon whom the claimants must depend to establish their rights are being scattered and lost sight of, and to delay further is simply to rob and deprive these parties of their rights, some of whom are widows and orphans, while others are colored, or men of small means.

That Congress has from time to time felt the necessity for making some provision for the disposition of this fund is evident from the fact that at nearly every session special acts have been enacted for the benefit of claimants of this fund, thus doing justice to some at the expense of others; and it seems to your committee that common justice demands that a general law should be enacted by which all claimants to the fund may be relegated to some tribunal where they can establish their rights according to legal methods and each receive that portion of the fund to which he shows himself entitled.

Time and again favorable reports have been made by one House or the other upon bills having in view the same purpose as the bill now under consideration. In the Fifty-second Congress, first session, the Judiciary Committee of this House made such report on H. R. 455 (Report No. 1377).

In the Fifty-third Congress, second session, the Judiciary Committee upon a number of bills of like character adopted a report of the same committee made in the preceding Congress.

The same in the Fifty-fourth Congress, second session (House Report No. 2568, from the Committee on War Claims, on H. R. 7618).

The same in the Fifty-fifth Congress, third session (Senate Report No. 1634).

The same in the Fifty-seventh Congress, first session (Senate Report No. 1292).

The same in the Fifty-eighth Congress, second session (Senate Report No. 1861).

The same in the first session of the present Congress (Senate Report No. 3290).

Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. BACON. Of course I recognize the fact that as the committee has failed to report it favorably the point of order made by the Senator from Maine will undoubtedly be sustained by the Chair. I have no question on that point; but this report absolutely demonstrates, I think, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States not only the propriety, but the high duty of Congress to enact this legislation.

Mr. HALE. I insist on the point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer an amendment extending the time for the completion of a local street railway.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That the time for the completion of the Anacostia, Surrattsville, and Brandywine Electric Railroad in the District of Columbia is hereby extended for twelve months from March 3, 1907.

Mr. HALE. As I am making these points of order, I must make it against this amendment. It is legislation.

Mr. FORAKER. I am sorry the Senator feels constrained to make the point of order against the amendment, because I think it will work a hardship.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer an amendment which I hope the Senator from Maine will accept.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

For the preparation of a table of contents and index to the final report of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission, $350, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move to insert, on page 7, line 2, after the word "annum," the words:

And the salary of the appraiser of merchandise at the port of Boston shall be at the rate of $6,000 per annum.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator from Maine makes the point of order against the amendment, I wish to say one word on the matter of the salaries of the appraisers. I have made many attempts to get the salary of the appraiser at the port of Boston increased. It is very low. It is only half what it is proposed to make the salary at New York. The work is just as onerous and it is just the same kind of work. The responsibilities are just as great and the expenses of living are no less.

I have been told year after year, when I have made the attempt, that never under any circumstances were salaries to be increased on an appropriation bill; and I was told particularly that the House would never permit the increase of a salary on an appropriation bill; that it was something the House could not endure. Now I observe the House has increased very largely the salary of the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York. I dare say it is entirely deserved and entirely proper, but I do not think there should be a different rule applied to one port from that applied to all others, and that the House should put on these increases of salary and we be denied, at all other ports and in all other cases in the country, any opportunity to get increases where they are greatly needed.

The salary of the chief appraiser at the port of Boston is now $4,000. I do not know what it is in New York at this moment, but I think it is $6,000. I move to make the salary of the appraiser at Boston $6,000, not to pay the New York salary, though that ought to be given.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator had moved to insert "six" instead of "eight" in the New York item, that, of course, would not be subject to the point of order. But I must make the point of order that the amendment is not in order here to raise the salary, changing the present law.

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to cut down the New York salary. I have no doubt it is perfectly proper. But I think we ought to have some arrangement which would be reasonably fair to the members of both Houses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and sustains it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language on page 61, line 1:

Employees on * * * the session rolls on the 1st day of January.

I am informed by a member of the committee that the roll in the House is made up as of the 1st day of February. I wanted to ask the Senator from Maine whether, if there is any doubt about it, it would not be wise to change the date from January to February, and then the matter could be adjusted in conference according to the fact.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, looked into that in connection with a case that came up and found that, so far as was known, everybody that could be covered would either be upon the rolls of the House or the Senate. So this provision covers every case.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have an amendment which I suppose is subject to a point of order, but I ask the Senator if he will not agree to accept the amendment. It merely extends the time to the State to be reimbursed, as others have been reimbursed, for expenses incurred in raising volunteer soldiers for the Spanish war. A great many States have been unable to get a settlement with the Auditor, and this only extends the time for the settlement. The time limit under the act has expired, and this merely extends the time. I wish the Senator would let it go in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

The general appropriation provided for in the act approved July 8, 1898, entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," is hereby continued in effect, and it shall be available for payment of all amounts heretofore allowed or which may hereafter be allowed by the Auditor for the War Department or the Comptroller of the Treasury, under the provisions of said act and the acts amendatory thereof, or by the Court of Claims, for expenses of the States incurred in raising, organizing, supplying, or equipping volunteers for said Volunteer Army.

Mr. HALE. I just made the same kind of a point against the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I must insist upon the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is in contravention of the rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

That section 5 of the act entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," approved June 17, 1902, be amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

"Provided, That upon the expiration of five years from the date of the entry of said lands by said entryman, upon proof of residence and cultivation of said land as required under the homestead laws of the United States and proof of cultivation as required by this act, and upon the payment by said entryman to the receiver of the United States land office for the district in which the said land is situated of all installments due or to become due upon said land under the provisions of this act, whether in payment for the said lands or for water rights thereon, said entryman shall be entitled, without further delay, to receive a patent from the United States for the said land, and to be discharged from all liabilities for any other or further residence upon said lands or payments for said lands or water except maintenance charges under this act."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this is the reverse of the ordinary amendment. This is an amendment asking for the privilege of paying to the Government several million dollars before it is due. It is hardly within the spirit of the ordinary amendment. It asks that these parties may be permitted to pay to the Government five years before it is due sums that amount to several million dollars in order that their titles may be clear. It seems to me that, inasmuch as the Senate adopted this amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill and it went out because it not was not considered by the conferees germane to the bill, the Senator should hardly raise a point of order against the amendment, proposing as it does to allow people to pay money to the Government when they are anxious to pay it and the Government will have the fund and get the benefit of the interest.

Mr. HALE. All the same, it is general legislation, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains it.

Mr. SCOTT. I have a very small amendment that I am sure the Senator from Maine will not object to, because it is so evidently just and proper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia proposes an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the sixty-nine Capitol police of the Senate and House the sum of $150 each as additional compensation to the salary they now receive.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the amendment increases an appropriation; that it is not estimated for, and that it is not reported by a committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is clearly against the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to reduce the sum proposed for the appraiser in New York, but I should like to have the matter before the conference committee, so that the conferees may consider the case of the Boston appraiser, who now has a salary of $4,000, in comparison with the salary at New York, which I think is a proper one. I therefore move to strike out "eight" and insert the word "seven," and, after "thousand," to insert "five hundred." That is in order, for it is to reduce an appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 1, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "eight" and insert "seven;" and, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred."

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to have the clause read as it will read if the amendment is adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hereafter the salary of the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] introduced a proposed amendment to this bill. He is ill at home, and at his request I offer the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado on behalf of the junior Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That section 2 of the deficiency appropriation act approved May 18, 1872 (17 Stat. L., p. 134), is hereby revived and continued in force and made applicable to all labor performed in excess of eight hours per day by all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning such pay: Provided, That all of the said claims for labor so performed in excess of eight hours per day be, and they are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, to be adjusted upon the basis that eight hours constitute a working day, and they are to be paid for at the price per day as provided in said act and judgment given against the United States in favor of each claimant for the amount found to be due, shall be paid as other judgments of the Court of Claims against the United States, and no statute of limitations or payment made or receipt given for a less sum per day than the full price of a day's work, as provided in said act, shall affect the right of recovery, nor shall any contract or agreement made by any such laborer, workman, or mechanic, whether for piecework, stintwork, taskwork, or any other kind of work, affect such right: Provided further, That all suits under this act shall be commenced within two years from and after its passage, and any number of claimants may join in the same suit: And provided further, That whenever a sufficient number of claimants of any one class shall join in one suit, so that the amount claimed shall in the aggregate exceed the sum of $5,000, the said claimants shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States: And provided further, That the heads of the proper and respective departments of the Government are hereby authorized and required to furnish, upon call duly made by or through the Court of Claims, a complete statement of all the laborers, workmen, and mechanics referred to above, who have performed labor under the direction of the said departments in excess of eight hours per day, during the period covered by this act, stating the amount of the excess of labor above eight hours in each case and the rate of pay per diem, respectively.

Mr. HALE. The amendment is a great body of general law, and I must make the point of order against it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I wish to make just a short statement.

Mr. HALE. Very well. I will withhold the point of order for a moment.

Mr. PATTERSON. This identical bill was reported favorably from the Committee on Education and Labor the 2d of February, 1903, but no action was taken upon it in that Congress. However, a few days ago, on the 27th of February, a like measure to provide for the payment of overtime claims of letter carriers was adopted by the Senate. The only reason why this amendment has not been reported from one of the standing committees of the Senate to the Committee on Appropriations is because the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor has been absent and no meetings have been held. The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] hoped that under those circumstances the point of order would not be made against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment is forbidden by the provisions of Rule XVI as an amendment to a general appropriation bill. The point of order is well taken, and the Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I would not ask the question I am about to ask if I had had the time to read the bill. It has just been reported, and the print we have is that of the subcommittee. I therefore ask the Senator from Maine if there is any provision in the bill to pay for the remaining expenses of the constitutional convention of Oklahoma?

Mr. HALE. There is.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I should like to ask the Senator who has the bill in charge a question regarding the amendment found on page 64, at line 8:

To reimburse the Hon. REED SMOOT for expenses incurred in the matter of the protest against his right to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States, $15,000.

I should like to ask the Senator of what items this consists?

Mr. HALE. The committee has followed the rule in all contested cases in putting on the amendment offered by the committee that had charge of the case. The expenses of the Senator in that case were greatly in excess of $15,000. The counsel fees alone, as I remember, amounted to this sum. It is a large sum; but instead of being like other cases, where we have reported $5,000 and other sums, cases that have occupied only a session of Congress, this investigation, as Senators know, dragged through two entire Congresses. The appropriation does not in any way make good the expenses of the Senator from Utah, but the committee thought it was advisable to put in this amount to partially compensate him for his expenses.

Mr. MCLAURIN. The question I desire to have answered is of what items the appropriation consists.

Mr. HALE. As I remember it, the payment of counsel fees amounted to $15,000, aside from other expenses.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The expenses of counsel fees alone amounted to $20,000. I happen to know about that.

Mr. HALE. I was under the impression that the expenses of counsel amounted to only $15,000; but the Senator is correct; they amounted to $20,000. However, the committee allowed him only $15,000.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senate by its action yesterday declared that it was not the policy of the Government to pay costs, and I think if that policy is to be pursued in one particular it ought to be followed in all.

Personally I should like to see the Senator from Utah get the amount, because personally I like the Senator from Utah; but it seems to me that this is a pretty loose way of appropriating the public money.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask the Senator from Maine, in charge of the bill, a question?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.
